Queen visits sappers at Hameln

HAMELN-based sappers rolled out the red carpet when the Queen, as Colonel-in-Chief of the Royal Engineers, visited them on November 4.

After watching demonstrations and displays of construction work, mine warfare, demolition, bridge-building, bomb disposal and map-making on the banks of the Weser, the Queen was due to cross the river on board an M2 amphibious bridging ferry to see sappers demonstrating armoured equipment and combat skills.

While the Queen was on board the M2, it was planned for a combat engineer tractor (CET) to fire its rocket-propelled anchor and pull itself out of the river.

Later, the Queen was making a private visit to the Hameln sappers' annual autumn fair.

RE to get new family of bridges

Royal Engineers in Germany and the United Kingdom are to have a versatile new bridging system by mid-1997. Pictured above is the Unipower tank bridge transporter, part of the £140m BR90 (Bridging for the 1990s) system. Story in Page 5

Those awarded the theatre honour will have the right to emblazon it on their Colours, Standards and Guidons.

Transport regiment back from Bosnia

Soldiers from 27 Transport Regiment, Royal Logistic Corps, on parade at Buller Barracks, Aldershot, to receive the United Nations medal from reviewing officer Maj Gen David Burden, in recognition of their six-month deployment in former Yugoslavia. During this "long and testing" period for the regiment, said Gen Burden, its men and women had followed up their tasks with vigour, fortitude, professionalism and humour. Under the command of Lt Col Jim Morrison, 27 Regt was part of the British National Support Element based at Tomislavgrad, with personnel based at Omis as a Transport Support Squadron

Sappers to have new bridges

A £140m contract for a new military bridging system was announced by Defence Procurement Minister Jonathan Aitken on October 26.

Main contractor for the BR90 (Bridging for the 1990s) "family" is Thompson Defence Projects. Planned to enter service with the Royal Engineers between 1996 and 1997, the system includes general support, close support, two-span and long span bridges.

Unipower will supply 8x8 launcher and transport vehicles for the bridges, which will be deployed with RE units in Germany and the UK.

Rankless award to replace DSO

A NEW "rankless" operational gallantry award is to replace the Distinguished Service Order (when awarded to officers for specific acts of gallantry), the Conspicuous Gallantry Medal, the Distinguished Conduct Medal and the Conspicuous Gallantry Medal (Flying).

The new cross, now being instituted, replaces the second level of operational gallantry awards for all three Services and will be presented at investiture.

At the first level, the Victoria Cross, already available to all ranks, is unaffected by the changes.

In future, however, only the VC will attract a monetary award. Current awards in payment or owed with pensions will not be affected.

Instead of gallantry, the DSO will now recognise highly successful command and leadership in all three Services. Although open to all ranks, recommendations on behalf of junior officers and non-commissioned ranks are likely to be rare.

DSO for leaders

The changes, announced by Defence Secretary Malcolm Rifkind on October 18, follow the decision by the Chiefs of Staff that all operational gallantry awards should become "rankless".

At the third level, separate awards for the three combat environments will be retained, with the existing Distinguished Service Cross, Military Cross and Distinguished Flying Cross becoming rankless. All three will be presented at investiture.

Mentions in Despatches, the fourth level, are to be reserved for operational gallantry as a direct result of recommendations from senior officers with recent operational experience.

A new Queen's Commendation for Valuable Services will be used to recognise the wide variety of other services within operational areas until now singled out by a Mention in Despatches. These Queen's Commendations, represented by a certificate and emblem, will be published in the London Gazette but not presented at investiture.

The Bill, presented by Mr Andrew Mackinlay, MP for Thurrock, seeks pardons for soldiers executed for cowardice, desertion, sleeping at post, throwing away arms and striking a superior officer.

PWO guards evidence of massacre at Stupni Do

YORKSHIRE soldiers have had the grim task of seeking to ensure that one day justice will be done in the wake of the latest massacre in Bosnia, writes Alan Patterson.

The tiny Muslim community of Stupni Do, perched high in the mountains some 50 kilometres north west of Sarajevo, overlooked the main supply route used until recently by the British UN battalion to support its most far-flung outpost in the town of Tuzla.

It was unremarkable; the soldiers who passed by on the road through the valley did not even know it existed. But that happy anonymity was shattered on October 23 when Croat gunmen descended from the forest.

When their cruel work was done only one of the 50 houses remained standing. Sixteen bodies, most of them burnt beyond recognition, were scattered in the ashes of homes.

No one knows how many others were incinerated. Cows' corpses lay in fields; a pet rabbit had been slaughtered.

Three weeks earlier the troops of the 1st Battalion, The Prince of Wales's Own Regiment of Yorkshire handed over responsibility for the northern area of Bosnia to a newly-arrived composite battalion of soldiers from Sweden, Norway and Denmark.

Swedish forces discovered the massacre, too late to prevent it happening but in time to intervene, as Croat militiamen attempted to destroy evidence.

The situation was tense, with the Croat commander threatening to attack the UN peacekeepers. The Nordic battalion asked for support.

The men of A Company, 1 PWO deployed at six hours' notice in their Warrior armoured personnel carriers.

Approaching the shattered village, after a two-hour drive through the darkness on steep, unmade tracks, they were confronted by armed Croat militiamen blocking their way in a narrow underpass where a railway bridge crossed the road.

The soldiers, led by company commander Maj Roy Hunter, were in no mood to be prevented from reaching their destination or to be forced into time-consuming negotiations. Maj Hunter ordered his 30-ton vehicles up the embankment, over the disused railway line and on up the road, avoiding the disconcerted militiamen.

As the soldiers of 1 PWO replaced the Swedes, who had guarded the village and prevented any further destruction of evidence, the scale of destruction wreaked two days earlier became clear.

The village had been beautifully located, with stunning views into the valley below. Now all was ruined.

One house, on the lower edge of the village, still stood; a sofa in the living room had been set ablaze but the fire had failed to spread. On a coffee table stood a vase of flowers.

In the cellars were tools, stores of fruit and potatoes for the winter; outside, stacks of firewood.

The Yorkies looked on as military police investigators acting for a war crimes inquiry sifted through the ruins.

The soldiers of 1 PWO counted the corpses in Stupni Do. No one knows how many others may be hidden in the rubble. Some villagers were able to flee and some have been taken by UN troops to the relative safety of other areas.

Over the hills in another valley lay a Croat village put to the torch. In this case Croat soldiers died and the civilian population fled. And so the cycle of agony goes on.

Topping day at Tidworth

A TOPPING-out ceremony on the roof of the Royal British Legion's £1.4m training college at Tidworth last month signified the advanced stage which, in a very short period, its construction has reached.

Carried out by the Lord Lieutenant for Wiltshire, Fd Marshal Sir Roland Gibbs, the ceremony marked the completion of the shell of the building.

Due to open early next year, it now has roof and windows and its interior has mostly been plastered. Its glass front, interior fittings and furnishings will follow in the near future.

The Legion project has been made possible by a £1,375m grant from the European Community - conditional upon completion this year.

Between them, commercial property agency Healey and Baker and independent company Miller Construction - supervised at each stage by the MoD - have managed to "produce the goods" on time.

The college, which is the RBL's major contribution to resettlement training of Service leavers and members of their families over the age of 16, will have a capacity for 1,000 students on job training courses lasting up to six months to National Vocational Qualification standard.

An annual throughput of around 1,400 is expected.

The courses provided, which include information technology, business studies and childcare, are designed to meet the current needs of employers.

To meet demand for courses since September last year, the college - which provides a crèche - has been operating in temporary premises at Tidworth, leased from the MoD.

DESIGNED TO BE DRIVEN

Royal Scots give Ben Nevis a face-lift

MORE THAN 80 Royal Scots from Fort George embarked on a high-level hill-clearing exercise.

Members of Charlie Company took a break from training to clean up rubbish left by climbers and tourists on Cairngorm and Ben Nevis, the two most popular mountains in the Highlands. The company split into two, one assigned to each of the great bens, with large plastic sacks replacing their SA 80 rifles as weapons.

Capt Neil Moffat said: "In the past we were appalled at the amount of litter left by hill-walkers and mountaineers.

"We're spending eight hours out there picking up litter, and at the same time raising money for the Army Benevolent Fund by getting local people to sponsor us.

"We'll be going to the top of both mountains, as so much of the rubbish is left at the summits – especially in the ski area of Cairngorm."

Welcoming the Royal Scots' initiative, Badenoch and Strathspey District Council environmental health director Henderson Pollack said: "We are delighted that the Army is doing this, because this is an area of outstanding natural beauty and we need all the help we can get."

Veterans see 2nd Regiment suspended

NEARLY 250 old comrades travelled to Germany to see the suspension of the 2nd Regiment, Royal Artillery after 92 years of service.

The regiment's departure from the Order of Battle was marked on October 1 by a parade in Loddenheide Barracks, Münster and a weekend of festivities.

Brig Peter Marsh, Honorary Regimental Colonel, took the salute and read messages from the Captains General and Master Gunner St James's Park.

A 25-pounder was driven through the ranks before the 2nd Regiment marched off in slow time to the tunes of Auld Lang Syne and the Royal Artillery slow march.

Final act of the weekend was for the commanding officer, Lt Col Janis Kazocins, to hand the regimental flag to Brig Marsh for safe-keeping.

While only two 2nd Regiment batteries will survive intact, the tradition of each will live on. Amalgamating with HQ Bty of 32nd Regiment is 46 (Talavera) Bty; and L (Nery) Bty moves to 1st Regiment RHA with its current manpower and regains Horse Artillery status after 35 years, as does N Bty (The Eagle Troop), moving to 3 Regt RHA.

O Bty (The Rocket Troop) amalgamates with HQ Bty of 1 RHA and also regains Horse Artillery status.

A 25-pounder is driven through the ranks of the 2nd Regiment RA during its final parade

Gunners mark Rock link

AN HISTORIC alliance between the Royal Regiment of Artillery and The Gibraltar Regiment was struck at a parade on the Rock on October 16. The poor weather did not detract from a ceremony that formally sealed a long-existing bond between the regiments.

The parade was reviewed by the Governor and Commander-in-Chief, Fd Marshal Sir John Chapple, who was accompanied by the senior regimental representatives, the Master Gunner St James's Park, Gen Sir Martin Farndale and the Honorary Colonel of The Gibraltar Regiment, Maj R Peliza.

Five batteries have earned the honour title "Gibraltar 1779-1783", the dates being those of the Great Siege. Representatives from all five were on parade – the 19th/5th now an amalgamation of two of them and the senior battery of the Royal Artillery. The others were the 21st (from 47 Regt); the 22nd (from 32 Regt) and the 23rd (from 29 Cdo Regt).

Acting as parade adjutant, and the only gunner currently posted in Gibraltar, was Maj Kevin Duhig. Both bands paraded under the direction of the Royal Artillery Director of Music Maj Terry Davis.

Both regiments exercised their rights of Freedom during a march down Main Street.

Links between the gunners and the Rock go back to 1704 when the British took Gibraltar and a Train of Artillery (not the Royal Artillery until 1716) was authorised for the garrison, arriving in February 1705. The Gibraltar Regiment, formerly the Gibraltar Defence Force, is much newer, dating back to 1939.

The Governor of Gibraltar, Fd Marshal Sir John Chapple (right), looks on as the Master Gunner, Gen Sir Martin Farndale, signs the alliance scroll in Gibraltar

Boffins try RAC hardware

Senior representatives of the consortium which was awarded the Army's Project UNICOM contract tried out the hardware as guests of the RAC's demonstration squadron at the School of Infantry.

The project, trials on which have just been completed, aims primarily to provide Army units with one standard computer system covering common planning, administration and quartermastering functions.

Logica; Col Tony Boulton, UNICOM project manager; David Scott of Integrated Networks, Northern Telecom, who are providing the communications infrastructure and carrying out the work services in units; and George McNeil of prime contractor Bull Information Systems (UK).

Medics move to new Hohne home

THE ROYAL Army Medical Corps' flag was lowered at Glyn Hughes Barracks, Hohne on October 8 as the men and women of 1 Armoured Field Ambulance marched away to their new barracks.

Their home since the end of the Second World War, Glyn Hughes Barracks, situated just outside the main Hohne camp, was a German field hospital during the war.

Col David Henderson, Commander Medical 1 (UK) Armoured Division, unveiled a plaque in memory of all who had served with 1 Armd Fd Amb in the barracks, and WO1 (RSM) Pete Jefferson lowered the RAMC flag for the final time while a bugler from the band of The Queen's Royal Hussars sounded the Last Post.

The unit marched around the camp and out through the main gate, which was then symbolically closed by Col Henderson.

A second ceremony was staged on the garrison parade square as the medics marched to their new home within the main camp. Brigade Commander Brig Andrew Ridgeway inspected the parade and took the salute before presenting Lt Col Tom Foster, CO 1 Armd Fd Amb, with a certificate signed by Gen Sir Charles Guthrie, C-in-C BAOR, authorising the re-naming of the new camp, which will also be known as Glyn Hughes Barracks.

A Gulf War medal was presented to the parents of the late LCpl Gordon McLaren RCT, who served with the Field Ambulance in the Gulf but died in a road accident before he could receive his medal.

● The name of the barracks perpetuates the memory of Brig Glyn Hughes RAMC, who masterminded the enormous medical operation following the liberation of Belsen concentration camp in 1945.

Steve's "Circular" tour

Setting off from Imphal Barracks, York, is Maj Steve Haskins, who, with brother Paul and WO1 Elwyn Pickering, was hoping to prove equal to the Arctic Auto Challenge. The trio – all serving or former RMP members – were due to travel more than 6,000 miles to the Arctic Circle via Paris, Vienna and Helsinki, returning through Europe to London in eight days. Giving Steve a send-off is his CO, Lt Col John Baber.

ROY'S JOY

Happy man surrounded by a happy family is WO2 Roy Hicks of the 5th (Warwickshire) Battalion, The Royal Regiment of Fusiliers, whose 41 years of service with the Army – 39 with the Territorial Army following National Service – were marked by a presentation of a Lord Lieutenant's certificate. With him to share the joyful occasion were (left to right) his daughter-in-law Maxine, grandson Samuel, son Ian (a lieutenant in the Sea Cadet Corps), wife Sally, daughter Deborah, daughter-in-law Pamela, sister Beryl, grand-daughter Danielle and son Gary.

Oh, brother!

Swapping Services for the day was Col Richard Williams (right), from the Royal School of Artillery, Larkhill. He decided to see what his brother, Gp Capt Andy Williams, gets up to as station commander of RAF Coningsby, and duly took a flight. He was reported to be none the worse for the experience in the back seat of a Tornado F3 aircraft piloted by his sibling.

An old KSLI regimental custom was revived when the Bligny Band of 5th Battalion, The (Shropshire and Herefordshire) Light Infantry (Volunteers) put on a fund-raising concert which featured a French horn once used by the KSLI, the only regimental band in the Army to use the instrument. The French horn was presented to Lt Col Peter Sharland (left), commanding officer of 5 LI, by Geoffrey Archer Parfitt, recently retired curator of the Shropshire Regimental Museum.

Medics "Raleigh" to the rescue

When UK-based charity Raleigh International sent an urgent plea to the MoD for assistance in providing medical personnel to third world countries, Col John Tinsley, CO of British Military Hospital, Iserlohn, and the hospital's adventure training officer, WO1 (RSM) Jack Gardener, jumped at the chance. That was how Cpl Robert "Benny" Bennington RAMC found himself on the Namibian-Angolan border, putting his paramedic skills to good use supporting the team of venturers carrying out various projects on the Skeleton Coast and in the Kalahari Desert. British Military Hospital Iserlohn now has several candidates who have been selected to help on projects in Chile, Zimbabwe, Alaska and Siberia next year.

It's all yours . . .

Handing over to his successor at Chester-based 1st Battalion, The Staffordshire Regiment is outgoing battalion RSM WO1 Steve Huyton (above), who had been in the post for three years. New incumbent WO1 (RSM) Nigel Whitehouse (right) was previously the Regimental Signals Officer.

"Delighted to be here and looking forward to getting to know the local community" was the message from Lt Col John Thomas on behalf of his regiment – 30 Signal – as their formal takeover of Gamecock Barracks, Bramcote, was marked by the unveiling of their new sign. The regiment, based at Blandford, Dorset, for the past 33 years, replaces the Junior Leaders Regiment, Royal Artillery, which disbanded earlier this year.

SIGNING ON

Female first

The sky's the limit for 24-year-old Hazel Davis, who, having got a taste for the life as a member of the TA's 266 Battery RA, has now signed up as a Regular to become the Army's first female air despatcher in the Royal Logistic Corps. Hazel, currently undergoing training at ATR Pirbright before joining 47 Air Despatch Regiment RLC at Lyneham, is seen being welcomed into the Regular Army by Lt Col Kate George RLC, from the Army Careers Office at Bristol.

Ambulance trains back on track in peace role

IF COALITION casualty figures during the Gulf War had reached overwhelming proportions, it would have been possible – international sensitivities permitting – for British Army ambulance trains to have collected sick and wounded soldiers from railheads in Syria and Iran.

The three-day journey from Germany to Damascus and Khorramshah would have been made possible by the use of Turkish rail ferries which cross the Strait of Bosphorus.

Since the end of the Second World War, the British Army has maintained a small amount of ambulance train rolling stock in Europe, operated by the Ambulance Train Squadron RAMC (Volunteers).

This Army Medical Services specialist unit had, until recently, ten trains, numbered 330 to 339. They included 335 (BAOR) Ambulance Train, raised originally as part of the Continental TA and manned by expatriates and dependants of Service personnel living on the Continent.

Now, under Options for Change, the squadron is to become an Ambulance Train Group from April next year. The new group will consist of a headquarters and four trains – 332, 333, 334 and 335.

The group's annual camp – Exercise Flying Scot '93 – involved two ambulance trains operating in a variety of scenarios through an area of Germany bounded by Sennelager, Hannover, Hohne and Gutersloh.

Aim of the exercise was to practise and test the military and medical skills of the new group.

Over the past two years, United Kingdom Forces have become increasingly involved in humanitarian missions and are having to consider new training procedures for events outside the parameters of normal operational deployments.

As a result, Flying Scot was based on problems typical of Central Europe and situations such as Bosnia. The two trains were deployed (for exercise purposes) in support of a humanitarian mission organised by the Ministry of Defence on behalf of the Overseas Development Agency.

Group commanding officer Lt Col Brian Robertson said his ambulance trains can operate anywhere in Europe, with the exception of Spain, Portugal, Finland and Russia.

"This leaves a very considerable area in which we could be used. The former Yugoslavia and the Balkan regions are obvious examples of where the use of rail to move wounded and refugees could prove invaluable.

"What has been forgotten is that rail is a very effective method of moving large numbers of people long distances in conditions of warmth and light, while receiving medical and nursing care," he said.

"We can move casualties in bulk – 500 to a train – and thus release aircraft for carrying troops and ammunition and supplies. One ambulance train can carry the load of two Hercules and a Tristar fitted for the aero-medical evacuation role," said Col Robertson.

Potential roles for the Army's ambulance trains, in addition to straightforward casualty evacuation, include the deployment of medical assets. For example, a train could move a field surgical team.

In crisis intervention and disaster relief operations, the trains could be shunted to a siding to provide the infrastructure for a ward facility alongside a surgical complex.

Col Robertson is ideally qualified to advise on matters of crisis and disaster relief. He was personally involved in dealing with several major incidents, including the Hungerford massacre, Clapham rail disaster and the loss of the Marchioness pleasure boat on the Thames.

Exercise observers included Commander Medical BAOR, Brig Chris Callow, and the Chief of Staff, Headquarters Rhine Garrison, Col Donald Ross. Additional personnel were drawn from a variety of units including 1, 3 and 4 Armoured Field Ambulances and 16 Signal Regiment.

In the aftermath of the Charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava in 1854, the British Army employed ambulance trains for the first time to move sick and wounded soldiers to a hospital at the rear of the lines. The trains were little more than labourers' wagons being used in the construction of a railway, but the concept of moving casualties by rail caught on.

One of the largest evacuation operations in the early years of ambulance trains, occurred after the Battle of Gettysburg when 15,000 wounded were moved by rail.

The first purpose-built ambulance train, built for service in the Boer War, 1899-1902, was funded by Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein.

Constructed by the Birmingham Carriage and Wagon Company, it was delivered by sea to South Africa.

It was lavishly appointed and contained a dispensary, burnished brass kitchen, nurses' lounge area and an officers' dining room, but carried only 74 stretchers.

In Britain, a Russian-designed version was in use until the First World War. The static battles in France and Flanders led to many ambulance trains being put into service and shipped across the Channel.

British ambulance trains alone moved more than five million sick and wounded troops during the war.

During the first battle of the Somme, 33,000 casualties were evacuated on 63 train journeys.

A look into the future as SSgt Michael Forsdick and QMSI (WO2) Peter Richardson demonstrate the wonders of digital terrain elevation data (DTED). When the British Army deploys anywhere in the world, computers using DTED can give an accurate picture of terrain, helping commanders and pilots to select routes or navigate effectively

New map makers know where they are going

A GLEAMING new bomber roars through the sky, its flight effortlessly controlled by sophisticated digital wizardry.

Built into its cockpit, however, as if to keep a reassuring contact with things more mundane, is a 60lb map box...

As the senior officer at Berkshire-based 42 Survey Engineer Group who imparted that nugget of information testified: "Despite the rise in digitalisation, until people have got confidence, there's still a need for paper."

But, keeping pace with change, staff at the recently-overhauled operation at Hermitage, near Newbury, are preparing for the day in the foreseeable future when the use of paper maps by the soldier on the ground has been superseded by an electronic equivalent.

Exit, from the Army at least, cartographers, air surveyors, and field surveyors, to be replaced by the topographic and terrain analysis technicians. The new topo techs, while retaining many of the old map making skills, make far more use of computers collecting and depicting geographic information from many sources including satellite images.

Out, too, for the most part, goes the time-honoured theodolite traditionally wielded by a surveyor in the field.

Its upstart successor is the electronic, digital, geodetic global positioning system (GPS) receiver, capable of retaining satellite information for up to half an hour.

The "tera tech" - terrain analysis technician - uses traditional methods, but, more often than not these days, a computer to manipulate geographic data to highlight aspects of terrain. Information is analysed to assist in the planning of cross country movement, route selection, weapon siting and so on.

Under Options for Change, 42 Survey has also undergone something of a revolution.

One of its two squadrons (19 Topographic) was disbanded in July, to be replaced by 19 STRE, and, despite the simultaneous arrival of a geographic support troop, numbers were greatly reduced.

Map production per se at Hermitage these days comes last in the order of priorities, one officer said.

Provision of vital updated maps and visual data for planning, training and deployment for operations anywhere in the world, support to emergency training and mandatory military training: all are given greater emphasis.

A whole range of geographic products is prepared by the unit, part of whose role is to up-date existing maps, changing them in some way, overprinting more recent information.

Terrain analysis enables features such as slopes and tree spacing – not depicted on the standard product – to be added.

And, when the latest maps are needed on the spot in, say, Bosnia, they can be printed and duplicated there and then.

Take a bow 13 Topographic (until earlier this year 13 Map Production) Squadron's reproduction, terrain analysis and geographic support troops respectively.

Among other essential functions, the 50-strong terrain analysis team interprets, using digital data, the easiest cross-country routes for troops on the ground in theatre.

This can vary from singling out roads and bridges which can sustain the weights of vehicles, to perspective views of the terrain and the amount of inter-visibility between two

Left – Spr Simon Wallace (Repro Troop) with a large format camera used to produce basic grey TACIPRINTs, which can then be overprinted in black or colour

Plates from photographs are dealt with in the press room, sometimes ending up, depending on size required, on the huge sheet-fed machines operated by Sprs Paul "Flash" Gough (foreground) and Dave Brown. Paul (sporting the troop's "Grim Repro" logo) earned his nickname when he was struck by lightning while on exercise

Back-up team for when those vital machines go wrong – here or in the field – are REME technicians Cpls Tony Sands and Wayne "Mr Fix It" Carlisle. At the time of SOLDIER's visit to Hermitage they had notched up five trips to Bosnia between them a mobile map production system housed on the back of a 4-tonner, and the map supply vehicles. Meanwhile, they are also responsible for the war reserve map stocks held in Hermitage.

Contained in a huge warehouse, the troop's war reserve map depot can, at the drop of a commander's cap, supply maps for any urgent British Army or Nato need, at home or abroad.

"A ready-prepared pack could be on a helicopter at a moment's notice," a geographic technician (or, in previous parlance, combat surveyor) from the depot said, proudly.

Also on site at Hermitage is the School of Military Survey, where students from Pakistan, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Indonesia sit alongside their British counterparts.

The school, which tutored teams in the art of desert navigation at the time of the Gulf War, trains technicians of all Arms in navigation, map-reading and other specialisms.

It is here, for example, where the mysteries of topographic surveying, using electronic total stations and the aforementioned GPS receivers, are unfolded.

There is little mystery attached to the air of dedication shown by the sappers of 42 Survey, however.

Despite their reduced number, they are manifestly doing their best to maintain the group's aim of "total quality in the provision of geographic information to enable the Forces to plan, train and fight."

points. These sometime cartographers, several of whom have already had a taste of service in former Yugoslavia, can also provide radar images of the ground for flight simulators.

Using data provided by their sister troop, the reproduction boys – also 50-strong – will add tactical information on new roads and military installations to maps from anywhere in the world.

Using an electronic camera and a scanner, they will make a single copy, separate it into its four colours and print as many copies as are needed, to a high specification.

"We make sure the map has a permanent finish," said a member of the troop. "It's no good producing a high quality product if it is going to fall to pieces the first time it gets wet."

When a young Iraqi goatherd stumbled across an eight-man SAS patrol during the Gulf War, he would have been unaware that his cry of alarm would eventually leave three members of patrol "Bravo Two-Zero" dead and condemn four others to a month of savage beatings and torture.

When the post-war gallantry honours were announced Bravo Two-Zero became the most decorated patrol since the Boer War.

Sgt Andy McNab (not his real name), who led the patrol, has written a book which graphically describes the ordeal. He talked of his experiences to Laurie Manton.

Supported by three Unimog "mother ships", an SAS Pink Panther traverses the flat terrain of northwest Iraq

Behind Iraqi lines with the SAS

TRUE STORY OF BRAVO TWO-ZERO

BRAVO Two-Zero was given two tasks behind enemy lines, to locate and destroy communication land lines along an Iraqi main supply route and to find and destroy Scud missile launchers.

Each man carried bergens and belt kits containing ammunition, explosives, food and NBC kit weighing about 154lb. On top of that each carried five gallons of water (weighing another 40lb) and two sandbags, tied together like saddlebags and slung round the neck, filled with cache rations.

Years of experience has made SAS soldiers masters of concealment. Nothing is left to compromise a position, old or current.

Bodywaste is collected in plastic bags and the contents carried. One soldier totes a one-gallon plastic "piss can". When full, its contents are emptied into a hole beneath a rock well away from the patrol route.

These measures prevent detection by smell, animals or insect activity.

"If you buried human faeces, it would create animal interest, and if discovered the ingredients could be analysed. Rice content, for example, would indicate Iraqis; currants or chilli would point to Westerners," explained Sgt McNab.

The patrol's weaponry justified the description, "armed to the teeth". Four men were equipped with M16 Armalite rifles fitted with 40mm grenade launchers. The remainder carried Minimi light machine-guns which can take belted ammunition in boxes of 200 rounds or ordinary magazines.

Every soldier carried a 66mm anti-tank rocket and white phosphorus and high explosive grenades.

Inserted by RAF Chinook helicopter on the night of January 22, 1991, 100 miles north west of Baghdad, the SAS soldiers were soon in trouble.

They had been dropped in the midst of 3,000 Iraqi troops who, according to Coalition intelligence, should not have been there. Radio frequencies provided for the area were unsuitable and the patrol was unable to establish communications with its base.

And the winter weather had

SAS deployment was biggest since 1945

THE GULF crisis of 1990-91 sparked off the largest operational deployment of the Special Air Service since the Second World War.

As international tension mounted 300 soldiers of A, B and D Sabre Squadrons of Hereford-based 22 SAS Regiment and 15 volunteers from the reserve R Squadron were sent to a holding camp in the desert.

When war broke out on January 17, British Special Forces, including the Special Boat Squadron, were moved by Hercules aircraft to a forward operating base 900km north west of Riyadh in Saudi Arabia.

Their task was to disrupt lines of communication inside Iraq and to create diversions that would draw enemy troops away from Coalition fronts.

The SAS Group was equipped with two types of Land Rover, the tried and trusted Pink Panthers (Pinkies), and a newer, smaller variant based on the Defender 90 and quickly dubbed "Dinkies".

Heavily-armed Unimog trucks acted as "motherships" in the desert, re-supplying patrols with food, water and ammunition. Motor cycles were also used.

The SAS succeeded in destroying many Iraqi microwave relay towers and communications. Its soldiers also captured an Iraqi officer and his battle maps, giving the Coalition priceless intelligence about Saddam Hussein's troop dispositions.

When Iraqi Scud attacks threatened to involve Israel in the war, SAS soldiers were sent behind enemy lines to seek out and destroy the mobile launchers.

According to Gen Sir Peter de la Billière, Britain's commander in the Gulf, Special Forces succeeded in giving Saddam the impression that Allied formations operating in the western desert were ten times the size they actually were.

This play drew substantial numbers of Iraqi troops away from the main theatre of operations.

Four members of the SAS died behind enemy lines. The regiment earned 41 awards, including one DSO, three MCs, three DCMS, seven MMs, 19 Mentions in Despatches, four MBEs, and two BEMs.

The only SAS soldier to be named in the citations was Cpl David Denbury, a Royal Engineer who was awarded a posthumous MM.

BRAVO TWO-ZERO

turned nasty – the worst in the Gulf for 30 years.

Once compromised, the patrol was forced to abandon most of its equipment and withdraw towards the Syrian border, some 170km away.

Bravo Two-Zero was soon under attack by dozens of enemy soldiers and two armoured personnel carriers mounted with heavy machine-guns.

"The Iraqis must have thought we were crazy," said Sgt McNab. "We were just eight, on foot, and legging it straight at them, shooting and screaming."

"It is a natural reaction to be scared and I cannot believe anyone who said they were not. The way to overcome fear is through a mixture of experience, training and knowledge. Our training, which is one of the strengths of the regiment, is a continuous cycle of training and operations."

"In battle it's just a matter of getting on with it. Nobody wants to do it. Nobody wants to go forward because there is a chance you might die. But you know you are going to die if you go back," he said.

Two 66mm rockets were fired, knocking out a truck and disabling one of the APCs. The other withdrew.

The machine-gun on the crippled APC was still being fired so two troopers – Steven "Legs" Lane and Dinger – ran up to it. The rear doors were open (the Iraqis had not batted themselves in) and a grenade was lobbed in, killing them instantly.

As Iraqi reinforcements arrived, the SAS patrol scrambled over a ridge, pursued by shells fired from a 57mm anti-aircraft battery. One soldier was knocked flat when a round slammed into his bergen leaving it smouldering.

Bravo Two-Zero escaped under cover of darkness leaving dozens of Iraqis dead or wounded. By now they had only what they stood up in, thin desert combat kit and over-smocks dating from the Second World War.

The men called for help on their TACBE combined beacon and radios, but to no avail. As the weather deteriorated into driving snow, three members of the patrol became separated from Sgt McNab and four remaining companions.

They marched for three days, to within 30 miles of Syria, then decided their best chance of survival would be to hijack a vehicle after dark and drive for the border.

This they did, but ran into a road block and had to shoot their way out, abandoning the vehicle.

They scattered and were shot at with everything from small arms to anti-aircraft fire.

Sgt Andy McNab joined the Army as an Infantry Junior Leader at Shorncliffe in 1976, serving with the 2nd Battalion, The Royal Green Jackets on tours in Germany and the United Kingdom. He was "badged" as a member of 22 SAS Regiment in 1984 and was awarded the Military Medal for gallantry during SAS anti-terrorist operations in Northern Ireland

They were in the middle of a vast military base packed with tents, buildings and vehicles.

(After the war, intelligence reports confirmed that the eight-man patrol had accounted for 250 Iraqi casualties – mostly in this final firefight.)

Tpr Steven Lane, 27, died of exposure and exhaustion after he and "Dinger" had swum across the freezing Euphrates to make their escape.

Tpr Bob Consiglio, 24, was last heard providing covering fire. He was hit in the head by a round that ignited a phosphorous grenade in his webbing and died instantly.

Sgt Vince Phillips, 37, one of the missing trio, became separated from Cpl Chris and Tpr Stan, and died of exposure.

Stan was captured and Chris was the only man to escape. In seven days, starving and massively dehydrated, with his feet cut to ribbons, he reached the Syrian border and was handed over to the British Embassy at Damascus. He had walked almost 150 miles on two packets of biscuits and some polluted water.

Andy McNab was discovered by Iraqi soldiers and imprisoned with Dinger and Stan at an interrogation centre. Mark, wounded, was held and tortured elsewhere.

It helped the men that SAS training includes briefings from former Colditz, Korea and Vietnam POWs, but Andy remembered with a shudder a former American officer who visited the SAS base at Hereford to recount his experiences as a prisoner of the Vietcong.

Bald as a result of the shock of his ordeal, he had wept openly in front of a subdued audience of Special Air Service soldiers as he told how his teeth had been ripped out and every major bone in his body broken.

Andy and his colleagues were tortured ferociously: beaten and whipped, deprived of clothing in freezing conditions, handcuffed and blindfolded.

In Andy's case, part of a tooth was extracted with pliers by an Iraqi dentist. He was less than impressed when the dentist admitted to having worked in Guy's Hospital, London, for nine years.

"I was blindfold and handcuffed and they started hitting me with what felt like a metal ball on a stick, like some sort of medieval mace. It thumped into my neck, arms and kidneys with terrible precision.

"I was screaming my head off and thought I was going to die. It just carried on. Hour after hour, day after day, beating after beating.

"They found new ways of hurting me. A red hot spoon was rubbed over a sore on my leg. The stench of burning flesh made me retch and I howled like a dog," he remembered.

Eventually Andy McNab reached his lowest ebb. Lying naked in his cell, he wanted to end his life.

"I was slowly dying. Your body tells you. The cell was awash with my urine and excrement. It covered me."

The human body has an amazing capacity for soaking up punishment, but how do people cope with pain?

"There is a stage where the physical abuse of torture is counter-productive and it makes the prisoner stubborn in his resistance.

"What you have to do is accept the fact that they control your body and there is nothing you can do about it. What they are after is your mind and the information it contains. So if you can control your mind, you have won," said Andy.

His most depressing moment came when he realised that he would have to abandon his cover story (that he and his men were the crew of a downed Search and Rescue aircraft).

"We were in adjacent cells and were beaten in a rotation system.

"You could hear the guards moving from cell to cell beating up members of the patrol.

"I was most scared when I knew it was about to come. I could hear the door bang. It was warped and they had to kick it to open it. You could hear the bolts being drawn, them kicking it and shouting and hollering. That used to scare me."

Soon after the war ended, the four men were repatriated and evacuated to an RAF hospital in Cyprus where they underwent a debrief for post-traumatic stress disorder.

Said Andy: "You have to remember that the SAS Regiment operates worldwide so the events in the Gulf were not the first traumatic incidents we had experienced, and we were not badly affected mentally."

"It was probably much harder on our wives and girlfriends who had been told we were missing in action, but sworn to secrecy.

"We had all lost comrades before but it was difficult to cope with the deaths of three of our patrol. It's like losing a relation because best friends in the Army are a much more intimate relationship. Hardly surprising if they'll die for you."

Sgt Andy McNab had hepatitis, ruptured muscles in his back, a dislocated shoulder, burns on his thighs, scar tissues on his kidneys and loss of dexterity in both hands.

Within six months, he returned to duty with B Squadron 22 SAS Regiment at Hereford.

He was awarded the DCM in the Gulf Honours.

In February this year, the four-times married soldier bought himself out of the Army. He said it was for the love of a woman, his bride of five months – Jilly – and a desire to become, in his own words, "slightly immature" for a couple of years to catch up on lost youth and enjoy foreign travel... peacefully!

Before the interview ended, Andy McNab revealed an untold story of the Gulf War to make a point about the SAS.

"Over the years, the regiment has often been described as an army of killers," he said. "That is wrong. By the very nature of our work, we actually save more lives than we take."

"After an SAS attack on an Iraqi communications base deep in Western Iraq, our soldiers, while withdrawing, saw a badly-wounded Iraqi survivor."

"Realising he would die without medical help, the patrol went back for him. They stabilised his condition, carried him back to the British lines and handed him over to a hospital before returning to base."

A good example of why the regiment is called "Special."

Yorkshire Volunteers mix it on Merlin

THE 8th (Yorkshire) Battalion, The Light Infantry (Volunteers) and 3rd Battalion, The Duke of Wellington's Regiment (V) spent their two-week annual camp at Stanford Training Area, Norfolk, in September. It culminated in a free-play field training exercise (FTX), Merlin Mix, run by HQ 15 (NE) Bde.

Words:
Tony Robson

Chris Barker

The scenario was based on a European country splitting into three mini-states – “Norfolk”, “Suffok”, and “Stanta”. Norfolk and Suffok both had the best interests of Stanta at heart and in due course had to cross the borders to assert the rights of their poor neighbour.

Their conflicting territorial claims resulted in a predictable head-to-head between the two battalions.

The action was enlivened by the participation of the “Stan-tan Irregulars” in the form of a platoon from the 1st Battalion, The Parachute Regiment briefed to fight anybody who came within range.

Maintenance of good order and discipline devolved, as always these days, to the UN Monitoring Forces who were provided by the Brigade Specialist Training Team, resplendent in blue helmet covers.

The exercise lasted three days and provided a wide range of tactical situations to test the battle skills of the troops and the political skills of the commanders. These included an assault, river crossing, helicopter operations and prolonged FIBUA battle.

Both battalions entered wholeheartedly into the spirit of the exercise, to the extent that an interesting and innovative variation on testing the chain of command was brought into play.

Instead of the commanding officer of 3 DWR being killed, wounded or posted, he was detained by the UNFOR team for investigation of some pretty wild accusations regarding his conduct of the war.

Capt Stuart Garnham, 2iC 3 DWR

He was duly led away, protesting his innocence in a convincing middle European accent.

COS HQ 15 (E) Bde, Maj Hugo Fletcher, PARA said: “The exercise aimed to give soldiers a taste of the complexities of a modern deployment. Everyone faced three potential enemies, which gave plenty of scope for error, and which thoroughly tested the chain of command and stressed the importance of a good passage of information.”

He added: “At the end of it all, everyone felt that the old Cold War ‘us versus them’ scenario was much easier.”

Small is beautiful at ATR Glencorse

ON A COLD day in May, around 200 recruits assembled at Glencorse Barracks near Edinburgh for 28 days' preliminary drill.

They camped on the ground adjoining the barracks, a skittle alley and vaulting bars were provided for their amusement, and, in the absence of anything more substantial, used a large marquee as a canteen.

Before anyone starts scratching their head in bewilderment, it should perhaps be explained that the events described relate to 1878 and not more recent times.

But three common denominators still apply: the weather, the recruits – and Glencorse.

In recent months, this historic Army site has seen its fair share of changes.

Scottish Division and King's Division companies now find themselves housed side by side, and, since May, Glencorse has had a new role – as one of the five Army Training Regiments formed that month.

In January it is due to take on the additional responsibility of being host to one of the new Recruitment Selection Centres (RSCs).

None of these factors appears to faze Lt Col Gavin Douglas, Glencorse ATR's commanding officer.

"The switch from the old 21-week course to the ten-week ATR system has worked well," he said.

"Of course, it was extremely hectic in the lead-up to the ATR earlier this year. King's Division started the first-ever ten-week course: until February we had been running courses of both lengths in tandem."

At that stage, Lt Col Douglas explained, the number of recruits hit a figure of about 480 (11 platoons), spilling over into nearby Milton Bridge camp.

It had since steadied down into four Kings and four Scottish platoons, and would increase to a total of five per company next year.

Results had been very encouraging, he said, even though many people had said the new system would not work.

"You have got recruits here for a relatively short period of time, in a very heavily supervised regime.

"It is a very difficult period for them, but I like to think that, by the end of the ten weeks, we have turned a civilian, with all his accompanying lack of, and dislike of, discipline, into a fairly outstanding product by the time he moves on to phase two for further training."

Glencorse was a small enough place, he added, for him to get to know all the faces.

He could also stay in touch with each platoon, attending their major events throughout the training period.

As he put it: "Small is beautiful."

The reduction in the length of courses had meant a faster pace of life for the training staff, the CO said.

"They now have a series of four ten-week courses, with the rest of the time involved either with block leave or preparing for the next intake.

"Sometimes, a training team will finish a course on a Thursday and start a new one on the following Monday – a further ten weeks, with seven working weekends."

And how has the arrival of members of the King's Division alongside their long-entrenched counterparts at Depot Scottish Division panned out?

"During the transitional period, all sorts of compromises have had to be worked out, such as on different regimental customs, what to wear on the drill square, the format for passing out parades and so on, but on the whole, things seem to have worked out terribly well," said Lt Col Douglas.

Maj Nick Channer and Maj Andrew Dennis, officers commanding A Coy (Scottish Division) and B Coy (King's) respectively, concurred.

"There is a good atmosphere and a certain amount of flexibility, with English and Scottish staff moving between the two companies," said Maj Channer.

His equivalent – who came to Glencorse with seven colleagues from Depot The King's Division in York – said:

All part of the life at Glencorse: Pte Buchan, Gordon Highlanders, indulges in a touch of adventurous training on Loch Lomond Proud players: pupils from Glencorse's piping and drumming wing at Milton Bridge Camp parade for the camera at the ATR's barracks. Camp Commandant Maj Jim Schroder (centre) says that, since they only attend for six months, the most they can hope for is a good basic grounding, but he has been pleased with results. Pipe Maj (WO2) Bruce Hitchings BEM (foreground, right) says: "We've got the best of the best here."

"This is one unit, and we all work together to the same end. It isn't the Scottish Division Depot with King's tacked on."

Both he and Maj Channer were pleased with the quality of troops going through under the ATR system.

"At first, it was disappointing not to see the guys going through to the end of their training, but passing them on to their respective battalions," said Maj Dennis.

"But we certainly achieve our aim in providing them with basic military skills: we place a lot of emphasis on getting the handover right (to phase two training), so there should not be a second bout of homesickness and unsettled feelings."

With everything from hill-walking to windsurfing, canoeing and sailing, with rugby, soccer and a "growth industry" in fishing (where all ranks can get to know each other) virtually on the doorstep, there are worse places for an instructor or recruit to be based.

Certainly, there should be no need for any recruit to take the desperate measure adopted by some former incumbents at the barracks, then known as Greenlaw.

They dug a narrow 100-yard tunnel in order to escape.

Mind you, it was being used as a Napoleonic prisoner-of-war camp at the time . . .

History is made at ATR Glencorse near Edinburgh as it holds its first joint Scottish Division/Kings Division pass out last month. Commanding officer Lt Col Gavin Douglas (left) witnessed the parade, which was inspected by Brig Colin Groves. Next to the CO is Lt Vance Kahn, on exchange from 1st Recruit Training Battalion, Kapooka, Australia

DEPT. S, 41 QUEEN'S GATE,

The Army Benevolent Fund is a Registered Charity, No. 211645

Double tops - and still counting

SCORING for a local school - a grand total of 696,126 points in 24 hours, to be exact - were eight members of 160 Provost Company, Royal Military Police.

The Aldershot-based unit raised more than £1,000 in a darts marathon held in the Warrant Officers' and Sergeants' Mess.

Two teams each played for two hours at a time with the aim of raising funds for Grange School for Mentally Handicapped Children.

Lt Col John Nelson, Provost Marshal and commanding officer of RMP Southern District, threw the first three darts to get the event off to a flying start.

Twenty-four hours later, organiser SSgt Chris Martin and his seven somewhat jaded colleagues declared that their marathon efforts had been more than worthwhile.

Royal Green Jackets Lt Richard Lupton and LCpl Ian Staples offered hours of invaluable training and supervision when members of the British Police Expedition Club carried out a high profile "controlled descent" from the Marmara Hotel in Istanbul.

Given coverage on 16 television channels, the event resulted in a flood of offers for help for the Anthony Nolan Bone Marrow appeal.

The club, which is dedicated to planning and participation in expedition-type events and travel, acknowledged the importance of tapping the "vast range of skills and expertise" available in the Armed Services.

Polar hero cheques in

When polar adventurer Dr Mike Stroud (left) dropped in to ATR Lichfield to give a presentation to the officers and SNCOs about his recent travels he was given a presentation of his own.

A cheque for £426 - the result of personal contributions by members of the Officers' and WOs' and Sergeants' Messes at the ATR base - for the Multiple Sclerosis Society, his chosen charity, was handed over by Sue Croft, herself an MS sufferer.

With them is Sue's husband, CSgt John Croft of The Cheshire Regiment.

The soldiers, who are due to participate in events in Egypt, London, Vancouver and Mombasa, hope to accumulate £4,500 needed to help 300 children who have sight problems regain full vision.

Details from Cpl J Willes on 0748 873318.

Lt Col Nigel Lampard, commandant of 3 Base Ammunition Depot RLC, helped to further relations with the German community by donating a cheque for DM1,684 to Herr Heinz Kirschner, local co-ordinator for the German Red Cross.

The money, raised at the sommer fest held by 3 BAD in Bracht, will be spent on helping to establish a day centre for disabled children and adults in the area.

The Royal National Lifeboat Institution has thanked members of the Armed Forces, who donated a total of £27,000 during the past year.

"We are confident we can count on this support in the future," said director Lt Cdr Brian Miles RN, "and wish all those concerned well when they carry out their difficult and often dangerous duties around the world."

Children from schools and youth clubs from all over Cleveland took part in a charity assault course competition organised by 122 (Green Howards) Army Youth Team.

Money raised from the two-day event, which took place on a specially constructed assault course in a recreational park, will go towards the locally-based Leigh-Ann Johns appeal.

Bristol University Officers' Training Corps combined adventurous training with raising money for local charities during the summer.

Twenty-five officer cadets drummed up £1,000 for cancer research by getting sponsorship for their first parachute jump, while others raised cash by competing in the Bristol half-marathon, a swimathon and a 'red nose' parade.

Mortgage benefit to be taxed

THE Inland Revenue has decided that the extra benefit derived from a mortgage arranged through the Services Preferential Mortgage Scheme should be subject to income tax with effect from April 1, 1993.

Applying the same ruling as to mortgage arrangements made by civilian employers, the IR has judged that the scheme, offered to Service personnel by the National and Provincial Building Society (N&P), is a benefit deriving from employment and therefore taxable.

The tax will be collected on the additional benefit which the scheme provides for the individual – in other words the difference between the official building society interest rate and the reduced rate offered through the scheme.

Only benefit in excess of £300 will be liable – so the extra burden will fall on those with larger mortgages.

Based on a 0.5 per cent difference in the official interest rate and the N&P preferential rate, a participant with a £30,000 mortgage would pay no tax because the annual benefit is only £150.

But a participant with a £75,000 mortgage would be assessed as benefiting by £375 and would have to pay £94 if taxed at 25 per cent or £150 if taxed at the higher rate of 40 per cent.

Individual mortgage holders need take no action themselves – the Inland Revenue is looking after the tax payment arrangements.

LEA compensation

SOME parents have had their Local Education Authority grant cut because they receive Boarding School Allowance.

They can, however, claim compensation of £20 or more for the 1993-94 academic year by filling in a special form and obtaining an LEA certificate verifying the details.

DSA increase

DAY School Allowance has been increased to £1.65 a day with effect from September 1, 1993.

DIY homes scheme MOAT-ivates Angus

ANGUS MORRISON, until last month a lance sergeant serving with the Scots Guards and a 14-year Army career behind him, is by his own admission a disaster when it comes to do-it-yourself, writes Phil Wilcox.

But, as he and his family were thrust temporarily into the spotlight last month, he was an extremely happy man ... thanks to one important form of DIY.

A "victim" of the phase two redundancies, he was being fêted as the 100th buyer of a home under the Moat Housing Society's division of the MoD's DIYSO (Do-It-Yourself Shared Ownership) scheme.

One of just three Housing Corporation-sponsored projects covering the entire country, Moat's area is the south and west of England.

The scheme allows personnel being made redundant under Options special terms to part-rent, part-buy a home on leaving the Services. In less than a year, Moat has helped more than 250 Service families to move into new homes in civvy street.

Deputy chief executive Christine Turner said that the DIYSO initiative was an extremely valuable programme, because it allowed Service families "to return to civilian life with a positive choice about their home and where they will locate".

Demand for DIYSO houses has been high.

More than 1,000 Service families have so far applied to buy homes under the scheme, and there is a waiting list.

Moat was recently allocated another 100 units in the present financial year, but there has been no announcement to date from the Department of the Environment – which funds the programme – about next year's funding.

Lt Cdr Bob Cribb of the Old Sarum-based Joint

Angus Morrison (centre), wife Mandy (with flowers) and children Karla and Matthew, celebrate their moment of fame on board HMS Belfast in London as Moat's 100th "customers" under the DIYSO scheme. With them are Moat's Christine Turner and Lt Cdr Bob Cribb from the Joint Service Housing Advice Office

Service Housing Advice Office, which handles the military aspects of DIYSO, said that he hoped the programme would continue, since it is the main option for those leaving the Armed Forces.

Lord Cranborne, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Defence, said he was well aware of the anxiety which drawdown produced in Service families.

"It is the MoD's responsibility to try to ensure that it plays the biggest part it possibly can to make the transition to civilian life as painless and constructive as possible."

The DIYSO scheme had proved popular, Lord Cranborne added, because it so much accorded with the needs and aspirations of people who were leaving Service life.

It would be even more in demand next year when a third round of redundancies could be expected.

The knowledge and enthusiasm shown by staff at the three centres, including Moat, should be an example to other sectors, he concluded.

There was plenty of enthusiasm – and not a little praise – for the Moat team from Angus Morrison and his wife Mandy.

While based at Campbell Barracks in Hönhe, he had seen their display at a redundancy roadshow and made enquiries.

Returning to the UK in April for a temporary attachment to the Army Training Regiment at Pirbright, he had pursued this "absolutely tremendous scheme" to the point of making himself a nuisance by telephoning every day.

Now, with 25 per cent down in payment, the balance being paid off in rent, with an option (which he intends to take up) to take out a full mortgage within a year, he, Mandy and children Matthew (8) and Karla (5½) have moved into a three-bedroomed house in Guildford.

Angus is hoping to start a new career as a prison officer, so the future for at least one ex-soldier looks promising.

Mandy said: "We've been in the house for just over a week, but it is a completely different world. I can even take the door off the kitchen if I want to ..."

Tyrwhitt tribute to Anne

A LEADING ex-Service charity was paying special tribute to the late Jacqueline Mayo – Anne Armstrong to SOLDIER readers – this month.

At a special ceremony at Tyrwhitt House, Leatherhead, Surrey on November 9, The Jacqueline Mayo Unit was being opened to provide an extension of the treatment facilities provided by the Ex-Services Mental Welfare Society.

The ceremony was being performed by Mrs Mayo's husband, Col John Mayo, in the presence of Gen Sir Charles Huxtable, the Society's president, as well as patients, trustees and friends.

Throughout her adult life until her untimely death at the age of 56 in May,

Jacqueline Mayo was involved in selfless and demanding activity on behalf of others.

Her wide-ranging interests included the Guides, SSAFA, housing, education, broadcasting and providing a regular campaigning and advice column for families in SOLDIER.

As a member of the Ex-Services Mental Welfare Society's management committee, she visited the Society's homes in Scotland and Surrey regularly and helped provide resources on their behalf.

She took a personal and detailed interest in the provision of nine extra ground-floor bedrooms at Tyrwhitt House for those who are physically disabled.

Commenting on her remarkable achievements, Society director Brig Tony Dixon said:

"It is entirely appropriate that the building should be dedicated as 'The Jacqueline Mayo Unit'.

"The building is not a memorial. It is a lasting and living tribute to a dynamic and courageous lady whose work is an inspiration and example to all who had the privilege of knowing her and of working with her."

ly from pay for 60 months towards house purchase and the MoD will provide an additional amount known as the Home Savings Allowance. Details and application forms are held at JSHAO. Staff advise: "If you have more than five years to serve and are not a home-owner, can you afford not to be in the

AFTER receiving many specific queries on their helpline, Bain-Clarkson, the underwriters of Personal Accident Insurance Plus (PAX+), have issued a reminder that the scheme does not provide for travel insurance or for medical/emergency travel expenses.

AHP still on for redundees

NO NEW advances will be made after September 30, 1994, under the Assisted House Purchase Scheme, which is being phased out.

However, exceptions are being made for those selected for Phase 3 redundancy, who should acquaint themselves with the transitional arrangements in paragraph 91.075 of the revised rules.

The AHP scheme was set up to provide an advance of pay to help Service personnel who have reached the age of 50 or who are within two years of their career end to buy a home in the area where they intend to live after leaving.

COUNTERPOINT

WHAT will the Forces of the future look like? Judging from recent debates, everyone has an opinion.

One option might be the more extensive use of the Reserves and it's a real possibility according to media relations expert Rupert Nichol in an interview for Counterpoint on BFBS.

The bulk of the Reserves comes from ex-Service people and their ranks are swelled by the Volunteer Reserves.

According to Rupert, the Government's suggestion that there be a core of "Ever Readies" who would be summoned from their jobs in times of need (reported in SOLDIER, November 1) is a good one.

It would work. He said that the enthusiasm within the Reserves is very high indeed. They really want to do the job they are trained for.

But will the Ever-Readies be accepted by the Regulars? Any ex-National Serviceman will tell you tales of tension between the Regulars and themselves. Wouldn't the Reserves be subject to the same sort of division?

Rupert Nichol dismissed that one. Inevitably, he said, there will be a gap at first but they will be there to do a job and, if they do it well they'll be respected.

This one – as they say in the theatre – looks set to run and run.

The Regular Forces Employment Association (RFEA) is trying to raise its profile at the moment so we have been giving the organisation a bit of publicity on Counterpoint.

The association exists to give advice on resettlement to non-commissioned members of the Forces and to help them find a job in the civilian world.

It's headquarters is in London and there is a network of 40 employment officers (EOs) – all ex-Regulars – in branches throughout the UK.

They are in close contact with a large number of employers in their area as well as the local offices of the Employment Service.

The service is free and, as long as the applicant keeps a "good character", there is a life-long commitment to help.

The RFEA is a registered charity. Eighty per cent of its money comes from an annual grant from MoD, the rest from Service benevolent funds.

Around 11,000 ex-Servicemen and women use the RFEA every year and they say that half of them are successfully placed.

When you leave the Services, after your resettlement interview a copy of Form ES828 is sent to the EO in your future home area. You should then get an invitation to an interview.

You can always make contact before that stage if you want to talk about your future. If you attend a final resettlement board you should find that the EO from the RFEA office serving your unit as a member of the board.

One quick footnote. I had a phone call from the wife of a Serviceman in Germany a few days ago about children and passports.

She was having difficulty getting a passport for her child to travel to the UK because, she said, she, her husband and her child were all born abroad.

The problem turned out to be rather more complicated than that but she suggested that a number of wives were having similar difficulties.

It's not a problem I've heard much about and I'm sure all the relevant support agencies are dealing with problems as they arise but, if I'm being optimistic and you're trying to sort out a passport problem with little success, do let me know.

If you'd like to get in touch with me you can write to me at BFBS, BFPO 786 or if you're in the UK, c/o SOLDIER.

Camo fashion is the uniform of flattery

IN HER letter (November 1) Mrs P J Barlow asked why the Ministry of Defence cannot prevent civilians wearing items of Armed Forces uniforms.

Much as I appreciate and, to a large degree, share her thoughts, I have to make the following observations.

When selling off surplus uniforms which may no longer be serviceable, an MoD ban on sales to civilians would merely push such sales abroad and we would see British uniforms worn by non-Britons instead.

To prevent manufacturers selling MoD-pattern clothing direct to the surplus trade would reduce its quantity production and thus serve to increase the unit price, probably resulting in quality garments becoming unaffordable for the MoD.

Quite a lot of surplus equipment and clothing is actually bought from high street shops by Regular and TA soldiers and cadets.

As an Army cadet more than 20 years ago, my first DPM suit and my first set of '58 webbing came from a surplus shop – there was no other way to get hold of such things.

As an ex-soldier of both the British and Rhodesian armies, I managed to hang on to both patterns of camouflage uniform – good, hardwearing clothing ideal for my walks in local woodland where I go to watch fallow deer.

I also use my old '58 pattern belt and pouches to carry my flask and my poncho. These pouches have been camouflaged after the old Rhodesian practice.

My issue DPM combat smock has long since worn out and I have replaced it with one bought from a surplus store in civvy street – am I not entitled to wear it because I was not formally issued with it? Where else would I obtain one?

There are many copies of international camouflage patterns available, some for the current paintball craze. Do we then ban copies of British DPM as well, while permitting

SUEZ EFFORTS APPRECIATED

I MUST on behalf of all ex-Suez member of the forces thank Col Pip Newton for carrying on with his search for the truth and justice in our fight for an award for the 1950/53 veterans who fought terrorists in that theatre.

We are extremely glad that Col Newton has not given up the fight and maybe his persistence will encourage many more ex-Suez persons of all ranks and all Services to keep on with the pressure for justice to those of us who had the job of holding our end up in Ismailia and other Canal areas. Long may Pip Newton keep on with his search, which will benefit personnel who served with him in the Canal Zone. Well done Colonel. – Walter Bentham, ex-Lancashire Fusiliers, Preston.

Farewell to Dad's Army?

I WAS interested to see in your article on Frimley (October 18) that the cadets were wearing 1958-pattern equipment.

This normally has to be borrowed, begged, purloined, or – at worst – purchased by members of the ACF, who would rather do this than use the hated, issue, 1937 pattern.

copies of America Woodland, French Lizard, etc, because if so we must then allow foreigners to copy British camouflage – rather defeating the object.

As I understand it, the wearing of uniform with unearned badges is illegal, but no action is taken. I suppose we must consider such things in regard of the phrase, "imitation is the sincerest form of flattery." – Still-camouflaged ex-soldier, Bardley, Worcs.

This cross is hard to bear

I READ with amazement about a female officer wearing a Sam Browne belt with cross strap on parade (October 18).

Surely this cannot be comfortable? The Army Dress Committee should have a rethink. – J Robinson, Chatham, Kent.

Prince is entitled to wear Canadian medal

ON THE subject of the Prince of Wales's right to wear the Canadian Forces Decoration (Letters, September 20), Canadian Armed Forces make no distinction between Regular and Reserve Force service when awarding medals, decorations and commission scrolls.

I left the British Army in March 1967 (RASC/RMP) and enrolled in the Canadian RCME(M) in June that year. I was given full credit for time served in the British Army towards earning Canadian honours.

The Prince of Wales would be entitled to wear his CD due to his service in the British Forces (Royal Navy) and to his appointments – Colonel-in-Chief and Honorary Colonel of regiments. I hope this solves the puzzle. – Maj (Retd) A Evans CD, Ontario.

DCM RULING REGRETTED

MANY ex-Servicemen will share the deep regret I feel at the announcement that the Distinguished Conduct Medal is to be replaced by a new medal to be open to all ranks.

The DCM – founded in 1854 – is the oldest British gallantry award, preceding the Victoria Cross by two years, and has always been particularly valued by other ranks.

As the only survivor of those who attended the centenary services for the DCM and for the VC and as a long-term supporter of the DCM League, I should like to protest at the "political correctness" of the DCM's replacement.

My father's DCM is still in my possession. – Ian S Hal-lows, London SE6

VETERAN air despatchers are attempting to raise £8,000 for a memorial to colleagues shot down over Arnhem in September 1944.

Machine guns and their merits

THE VERY title, The Machine Gun – A Modern Survey puts this new book in the no-no category so far as coffee-table reading goes.

But it probably has a place on the bookshelf as a reference source, ready to settle arguments as to the merits of the various models – in other words, their killing power.

The machine gun must come close to the top of the list in this respect and Terry Gander sets out the history of the automatic machine gun, its probable development and enhanced firepower.

He starts with the Maxim gun, following it up with the Gatling and Browning versions, then German, Chinese, Spanish, Czech, Israeli, Brazilian, Swiss, Italian, the American and many more.

The rate of fire on some models is given as 6,000 rounds a minute, with others ten times slower.

But these figures are really meaningless as it is unlikely that any single-barrel gun can actually discharge 600 rounds a minute, let alone 6,000, as there are none around capable of withstanding more than extremely short bursts of fire.

This book is likely to excite only those with a current or past professional interest in the subject. – JM

WAR, PEACE AND THE FUTURE

READING any history of mankind gives the impression that there has always been a perpetual condition of low-level warfare in all societies, with irregular episodes of intense conflict.

Of course, that is a somewhat misleading and pessimistic interpretation; an optimist could equally call the overriding condition one of uneasy peace.

What is war? John Keegan's A History of Warfare shows this is not the simple question it may seem.

"I hope I have called into doubt that there is a simple answer... or that war has any one nature," he writes. "I hope, too, that I have cast doubt on the idea that man is doomed to make war or that the affairs of the world must ultimately be settled by violence."

In reviewing a book of such scope, one inevitably will be accused of neglecting at least one vital aspect, probably more. To begin with the author examines the "warrior culture" passed down through generations, with such examples as the Polynesians of Easter Island and the Maoris, the Huns, Ephthalites, Bulgars, Avars, Mongols, Tartars, and Manchus.

From the book's introduction, which is autobiographical, John Keegan makes repeated references to the Prussian, Carl von Clausewitz, the author of On War, written after the Napoleonic Wars in which he served.

Clausewitz has been termed the ideological father of the First World War; Basil Liddell Hart placed at his door responsibility for the general command's philosophy of the largest possible offensive with the largest possible numbers of men as the key to victory.

This was the first war in which the British Army suffered more fatalities from missiles than from sickness.

The book is as much a history of weaponry as of motivations and executions of war, and the author quotes Churchill: "What was gunpowder? Trivial. What was electricity? Meaningless. This Atomic Bomb is the Second Coming in Wrath!"

Not that Keegan shares this belief, pointing out that in the past it was judged that a war's benefits outweighed its cost, but now costs clearly outweigh the benefits. Since August 9, 1945, he points out, nuclear weapons have killed no one.

"The 50,000,000 who have died in war since that date have, for the most part, been killed by cheap mass-produced weapons and small-calibre ammunition, costing little more than the transistor radios and dry-cell batteries which have flooded the world in the same period."

Unlike many historians, military or social, John Keegan is essentially an optimist, as is shown in his conclusion: "Politics must continue; war cannot. That is not to say that the role of the warrior is over."

"The world community needs, more than it has ever done, skilful and disciplined warriors who are ready to put themselves at the service of its authority."

"Such warriors must properly be seen as the protectors of civilisation, not its enemies," says Keegan.

"The style in which they fight for civilisation – against ethnic bigots, regional warlords, ideological intransigents, common pillagers and organised international criminals – cannot derive from the Western model of warring alone."

"Future peacekeepers and peacemakers have much to learn from alternative military cultures, not only that of the Orient but of the primitive world also."

Which, surely, is what the wider study of military history is all about. – BJ

History of the Lancers updated

ON JUNE 25 this year the 17th/21st Lancers ceased to exist. Succumbing to the euphemistic Options for Change, they were joined with the 16th/5th Lancers to form The Queen's Royal Lancers.

In 1968 Col Val French Blake, CO of the 17th/21st in the Second World War, published his history of the regiment, which appeared in the Hamish Hamilton/Leo Cooper "Famous Regiments" series. Now this author has given us The 17th/21st Lancers 1759-1993.

As the title reveals, this brings the story up to the present day – well, almost, for when he completed it, the amalgamation had not taken place. Those who have perused the earlier volume will find that the present work is no more than a reprint with only a new final chapter, an extra appendix (charting the armour deployed since 1939), some fresh illustrations and a sym-thetic foreword by John Keegan.

There is also an index (sadly lacking in the "Famous Regiments" volumes).

As before, and in the same words, we trace the origins and campaigns of the two regiments that came together as the 17th/21st Lancers in the Defence cuts of 1922 – precursor of Options for Change.

The 17th began life as Light Dragoons in 1759, becoming Lancers only in 1823. The 21st emerged from the 3rd Bengal European Light Cavalry, transferred to the British Army in 1858 on the demise of the Hon East India Company.

First as 21st Light Dragoons, then Hussars, it was not until 1897 that they were retitled Lancers, the last regiment to be so designated.

Naturally, the author devotes much space to celebrated actions: the Balaclava "death ride" in which the 17th won three VCs; the charge at Omdurman by the 21st, gaining them an equal clutch of VCs, and the subtitle "Empress of India's."

After campaigning in far-flung theatres of war – South America, India, South Africa and the carnage of the First World War, mechanisation smote the 17th/21st in 1938 while at Meerut. The first vehicle to appear was a civilian Ford car "pushed from the station by Indian syces with the RQMS, not yet mechanised, sitting proudly at the wheel."

The Second World War saw the regiment heavily engaged in the Western Desert and Italy, now mounted in Sherman tanks (but was the 75mm main armament "a dual-purpose field gun"?).

The new final chapter describes service in BAOR, Northern Ireland and Operation Grapple to see off Saddam Hussein from Kuwait. To their disappointment the 17th/21st was not employed as a regiment but contributed troops attached to the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards and the Queen's Royal Irish Hussars.

Embellished with 25 illustrations and six maps, this updated history will be welcomed by those unacquainted with the original volume, long out of print.

"The 17th/21st Lancers exemplifies the regimental system at its best. Its friends

STUDENTS of the First World War – and those with a general interest in the subject – can gain insight into the "war to end all wars" from a new book.

Panorama of a grim horizon

It was more than 400 miles long, but did not run in a straight line as is often popularly imagined, but zig-zagged its way across Belgium and France.

The Germans named it the Western Front to distinguish it from their eastern front against the Russians, the Allies later adopting the name for themselves.

D-DAY COAST FROM THE AIR

INTENSE interest is building up to the 50th anniversary of D-Day next June. Celebrations of one of the most significant events in the history of this country are keenly anticipated by the survivors of those momentous days.

Newspapers are serialising veteran's stories, Hollywood is reportedly planning a re-enactment of the landings, and floods of new books are expected to hit the shops between now and next June.

Getting in early on this literary wave is Stephen Chicken, a serving RAF officer, with Overlord Coastline – the Major D-Day Locations.

His book tells a good deal of history about D-Day with a special emphasis on what can be seen today at the landing sites. It is packed with details about the Normandy beaches: where to go, how to get there.

He has included some excellent photographs of German defences along the whole of the Normandy coast.

There are a number of aerial views taken by the RAF at the time of the invasion and pictures of tanks, guns and other weapons used by the Allies and the defending Germans.

This is a well-researched book and will be most useful for those visiting the Normandy battlefields. It is also an excellent guide as to the what, when, where and how of the D-Day invasion. – JMB and attack from the rear – the North Sea and the Royal Navy being at one end and Switzerland at the other.

Many of the photographs and drawings have a similar look, except those showing the more mountainous region at the Swiss end.

But wherever the troops found themselves there was one feature common to everywhere – mud. It's not like that now, of course, the area being as verdant and proliferous as when these illustrations were first produced. – JM

Panorama of the Western Front by John Laffin. Alan Sutton, hardback, £14.99.

IN BRIEF

Waterloo Letters edited by Maj-Gen Herbert Siborne. Number 25 in the Napoleonic Library series of re-published classics comprises the writings of the editor's father, Capt William Siborne of the 9th Foot. Greenhill Books, £19.50.

Three from the USA: The 51st Again! by Barry W Fowle and Floyd D Wright (White Mane Publishing Co Inc, hardback, £19.50) telling the story of the 51st Combat Engineer Battalion, who took part in D-Day; A Doughboy with the Fighting 69th by Albert M Ettinger and A Churchill Ettinger (White Mane, hardback, £19.50) – stories of the First World War; and Don't Bunch Up by William Van Zanten (Archon, hardback, £20), a Marine's tale from Vietnam. All three available from Jerboa-Redcap Books, PO Box 1058, Hightstown, NJ 08520, USA. Prices include surface postage to the UK.

Disputed Frontiers: A Prelude to Conflict by Reg Herschy. An examination of the world's unresolved frontier disputes by a former member of the Royal Army Educational Corps. Book Guild, hardback, £12.95.

Fighting Fit: The SAS Fitness Guide by Adrian Weale. According to the blurb, this large-format paperback will "help you get fit, lose weight, gain self-confidence and discover new levels of toughness in yourself". Sounds like the answer to everyone's dreams. Worth a read, if only for the entertainment value. Chapmans, £9.99.

Waspish humour in a good cause

IT DEPENDS largely on your sense of humour whether you enjoy The Stars' War, a compilation of stories by celebrities who served in the Second World War, were called up for National Service, or who entertained the Forces.

More than 40 "stars" have contributed recollections of their time serving or working with the Services to raise money for the West Midlands Autistic Society.

Though not all are meant to be humorous, some of the stories will create a chuckle, like Leslie Thomas's 100-word piece on the day a wasp flew up his nostril while he was on parade and being inspected by the late Fd Marshal Sir John Harding, then GOC Malaysia.

Michael Bentine's three pages on the time he saw the ghost of an RAF pal hours after he had been killed in a raid over Britain is also nicely told.

George Melly's yarn follows the style of his singing, laid-back and casual, informing one and all that he joined the Navy for no other reason than that he found the uniform "more amusing".

Arch Goon Sir Harry Secombe tells of the time he was treated for dysentery after reporting that he had lost his glasses... and so the stories come tumbling out. Total trivia, but all in a good cause.

Among the starry contributors are Norman Wisdom, Bob Monkhouse, James Herriott, Prof R V Jones, top egghead at Bletchley where they broke the German Enigma code, stargazer Patrick Moore and football greats Tom Finney and Sir Matt Busby. – JM

The Stars' War edited by Hugh Morgan, with profits going to the West Midlands Autistic Society. Images, £7.95.

Met go down to Army in penalty shoot-out

Met Police 4,
Army 5 (after penalties)

THE ARMY got the better of a penalty shoot-out against the Met to win the annual Grenadier Guards Challenge Trophy match after the sides had been deadlocked at 2-2, writes Derrick Bly.

Fielding their strongest side of the season, the Army played some neat, attacking football in the opening half and went ahead when SSgt Davies scored following good work by Sgt Tony Wright.

Davis had earlier forced the Police 'keeper to save sharply when he lost his marker after being put through by SSgt Alan Higgins.

Army 'keeper SSgt Nigel Wiscombe was unsighted when Nicholson equalised for the policemen with a flicked header, but skipper SSgt Kevin Parkins restored the Army lead from a corner set-piece.

The visitors were back on terms in the 64th minute through substitute Pendry, a score-line which neither side could improve in normal time.

The nearest the Army came to a winner was five minutes from time when a Higgins free kick was flicked on by Parkins, only for Strouts to nudge it wide.

Parkins, Collins, Higgins, Strouts and Maynard were the successful Army penalty-takers.

The challenge trophy was presented to winning skipper Kevin Parkins by Maj Gen Brian Pennicott, chairman of the Army Football Association.

LCpl Bryant heads the ball off the BAOR line during the match against mighty Borussia Monchengladbach at Wortham Barracks in Bracht

Borussia's big guns pound plucky BAOR

BAOR 1,
Borussia 3

BORUSSIA Monchengladbach, fresh from a 4-1 win over MSV Duisburg in the German Bundesliga, fielded a star-studded team containing Danish, German Under-21 and Georgian internationals for the fixture against BAOR at Wortham Barracks in Bracht.

The famous German side included eight of the team who had beaten Duisburg and scored after five minutes when Danish striker Neilsen blasted an unstoppable volley past 'keeper Cpl Blakey.

But BAOR, who included debutants Cpl Service and SI Simpson, matched Borussia for the next 30 minutes and, with a little more composure, might have scored twice. Pte Holt and man of the match Sgt Murgatroyd were a thorn in the side of the professional outfit with their probing runs.

Two more outstanding strikes by Neilsen and Max put the visitors three up by half time.

Holt produced a brilliant save from the Borussia 'keeper after the break, and the BAOR side eventually pulled one back when Pte Yeo came on for the tiring SI Adam.

BAOR 3,
R Sigs (UK) 1

Holt, LCpl Lockwood and SSgt Rothery scored the goals that earned a 3-1 win for a weakened BAOR side over the Royal Signals (UK). Sig Banbrook scored for the tourists.

In previous games this season, BAOR lost 3-0 to Sheffield United, beat the Army (UK) 5-2 and lost 3-2 to the Polish Army. Highlight of the squad's season is a tour to Kenya in the New Year.

George singled out for acclaim

WHEN the Wales and Western District Army cross country relay championships were held on Nesscliff Training Area, near Oswestry, the main focus of attention was starter Capt (Retd) George Crump.

George sustained an injury that ended his promising Army athletics career many years ago, but far from putting him off, it inspired him to devote much of his life to the sport he loved as a coach and administrator.

Recognition of his contribution was marked at the end of the event when George was called forward to receive a plaque in recognition of his services to Army cross country. His work on behalf of the sport was recognised at the highest level in 1980 with the award of the MBE.

The plaque was presented by Col Peter Cook, Chief-of-Staff, HQ Wales and Western District.

George is due to retire from his job at the Army Apprentices College at Chepstow. Since he began work there in 1962 he has in his spare time coached hundreds of Army runners and organised countless athletic meetings for both the Regular Army and the TA.

For 12 years he was president of the Welsh Cross Country Association, organising the 1976 world cross country championships in Chepstow.

The Wales and WDist event was won by a team from Preston, with Base Ordnance Depot at Donnington second and teams from the Apprentices College, Chepstow, finishing third and fourth.

Longmoor finals

FINALS of the Army cross country championships are to be held at Longmoor Training Camp, Bordon, on February 2. The senior race will incorporate the Inter-Unit championships (Major and Minor and veterans' team), and the Army senior and veteran individual championships.

Consistent Regulars contain TA challenge

THE REGULAR Army retained the Gilbert Trophy at the Inter-Services long range small bore championships on Ash Ranges, Aldershot, with the Territorial Army second, the Royal Air Force third and the Royal Navy fourth.

In damp, cold conditions the Regulars won both prone-standing-kneeling and long-range matches and were second in the 50m competition.

Although Combined Services improved on last year's showing, they still lost the annual match against the English Small Bore Union shot on the same day, and in the other concurrent competition, the Regular Army completed a clean sweep over the Police Athletic Federation by winning all three matches.

Winner of the Inter-Services individual championships for the Wilkinson Sword was Capt Cameron Ferguson (REME) (1,950 out of a possible 2,000), a point ahead of Cpl(W) McGregor of the RAF. WO2 Tony Cheese (Int Corps) was third, Pte R Williams (TA) fourth and Maj Peter Underhill (D and D) fifth.

Underhill won the Army small bore championships, also shot on Ash Ranges, after a very close competition with Lt Col Alan Glasby (RLC).

After the first stage, shot centrally over 25 yards, Underhill led Glasby by four points. But Glasby won stage two to draw level, with Ferguson close behind in third place.

Stage three had to be postponed because of fog, but was completed in cool, damp and windless conditions two days later.

Glasby took the lead after the prone by a point, but Underhill reversed the positions with a commanding 12-point lead during the standing, and by dropping only four points to Glasby in the final kneeling phase, maintained his lead to win the match and the Army small bore target rifle championship by eight points.

Three newcomers - Capt Richards, WO1 Blackburn and SSgt Partington - were selected to join the Army squad for the Inter-Services championships.

Veterans on world stage in Vienna

THE ARMY Rowing Club, sponsored by GNI Inter-Commodities, sent a 12-man team to the world veteran rowing championships in Vienna.

Competing in the A (27 to 35) and B (36 to 42) age group categories, the Army veterans entered ten events in eights, coxed and coxless fours, coxless pairs and double sculls, and recorded several fourth and fifth places against strong international competition.

Racing, held over two days on the eight-lane 1,000m course used for the 1991 world championships, was of a high standard despite strong winds.

Best results were achieved in the smaller boats. The B coxless four broke the Joint Services regatta record by a second, and a B double scull comprising Maj Tim Park and Maj Jerry Allen lowered the JSR record by three seconds while finishing fourth in their final.

The B coxed four, who came sixth in their final, also lowered the Joint Services record.

The B coxless pairs (Maj Paul Marsden/Maj Les Edwards and Maj Max Heron/Maj Julian Lyne-Pirkis) recorded identical times of 3min 47sec – four seconds outside the Services' record.

The eights were not as competitive. Dynamo Moscow included several former Soviet internationals and led the way in the B final although the Army eight maintained a good lead over Masters Italia throughout the race.

The eights competition also included exceptionally fast German and Croatian crews.

Next year the Army veterans hope to be among the medals when the championships are staged in Holland.

REME rules roost, again

REME retained the Inter-Corps hockey title at Aldershot, beating the Adjutant General's Corps by five goals to three, writes Alan Healey.

In all, seven corps took part in the tournament to get the Army season off to a cracking start.

The Matchmaker fair play trophy was won by the Royal Logistic Corps, who not only played the game in the right spirit but also fielded the best-dressed team. The RLC also had some success on the field, finishing as runners up to the Royal Engineers in the plate final.

In the semi-finals of the main competition, REME overcame the Royal Signals 3-1 and AGC defeated the Infantry 3-2.

Col George Gadd, who umpired the final, received the Charlie Wood Memorial Salver for his outstanding contribution to the Army Hockey Association over many years.

The AHA is the first in Army sport to be awarded Sports-match sponsorship under the government initiative to match pound for pound any new appropriately justified commercial sponsorship – in the AHA's case that of insurance brokers Bain-Clarkson.

First match of the Army senior side's representative season was against Lusitanians at Aldershot on October 26.

The Inter-Corps indoor tournament was taking place at RAF Newton on November 5, followed by the Inter-Services indoor championships at RAF Cosford on November 18-19.

The Under-21 trials are scheduled for Aldershot on December 4-5.

The venue of this season's Inter-Services tournament, from March 9-11, has not yet been decided, but the Army's domestic finals, both Major and Minor Units, will be at Aldershot on March 30.

Red and gold

THE PARACHUTE Regiment's Red Devils won gold medals in both the four-way senior and intermediate competitions at the British parachuting championships at Weston-on-the-Green, Oxfordshire.
