Desert force

Scoop: This superb photograph, reproduced in most national newspapers in Britain, was taken by Cpl Paul Jarvis RLC, a member of an Army mobile news team.

A former sergeant in the Royal Engineers, Cpl Jarvis, 31, joined the MNT in December straight from the Joint School of Photography at RAF Cosford. Kuwait is his first operational deployment with the news team.

His picture shows more than 4,000 men and women from 7 Armoured Brigade and 16 Air Assault Brigade being addressed in the Kuwaiti desert by Lt Gen James Conway, commander of 1 Marine Expeditionary Force. They had assembled at Camp Coyote in northern Kuwait with their Challenger 2 tanks and Warrior infantry fighting vehicles to hear him say that when he heard "the British were coming, it was a very positive thing. It is great to have you aboard".

Pipers from the 1st Battalion, The Black Watch played as Gen Conway arrived to take his place on top of a Challenger main battle tank bedecked with the Union flag and the Stars and Stripes. Among the berets visible are those of The Parachute Regiment, the 2nd Royal Tank Regiment, the Army Air Corps, The Royal Regiment of Fusiliers, the Royal Artillery, the Royal Signals and the Royal Engineers.

Many soldiers appear to be looking through binoculars at the F-18 Hornet and AH-1 Cobra attack helicopters overhead.

Eve of battle: Lt Col Tim Collins, commanding officer of 1 R Irish, addresses his soldiers on the evening before the first missile was fired

Targeting rules protect civilians

Respect Iraq and Iraqis, troops told

A PRIORITY for commanders in the Gulf is to limit civilian casualties. Every target will be scrutinised to make sure it accords with the objective of ridding Iraq of weapons of mass destruction and falls within the guidelines of the international Law of Armed Combat (LOAC).

Commanders are trained in LOAC and at every command level in the targeting process there is a legal adviser to ensure minimum force is used.

Under the rules, targeting civilians or civilian objects is prohibited, although if a civilian object is used for military purposes or is of dual use it may become a legitimate target.

Restrictions include the need to protect cultural, historical and religious sites, as well as medical facilities and objects indispensable to the Iraqis, such as food-stuffs, agricultural areas and drinking water.

● A message from the Queen to troops in the Gulf expressed her pride in them and her confidence that they would face the challenges before them.

"Especially for those of you now waiting to go into action, may your mission be swift and decisive, your courage steady and true, and your conduct in the highest traditions of your service, both in waging war and bringing peace.

"My thoughts are with you all, and with your families and friends who wait at home for news and pray for your safe return."

AS this issue went to press coalition troops were on the move in southern Iraq following missile strikes against specific targets in Baghdad. Scud missile attacks on northern Kuwait were reported.

It was confirmed that eight members of 3 Commando Brigade had died when a US CH-46 Sea Knight helicopter crashed.

● Admiral Sir Michael Boyce, Chief of the Defence Staff, said in a message to the Armed Forces: "I have issued the directive to start operations in Iraq. The actions on which we are about to embark are just and lawful, and will be conducted in accordance with international law."

THE imperative to respect Iraq's people was spelt out to his troops on the eve of battle by Lt Col Tim Collins, commanding officer of the 1st Battalion, The Royal Irish Regiment, at Fort Blair Mayne in northern Kuwait.

"We go to liberate, not to conquer," he said. "We will not fly our flags in their country. We are entering Iraq to free a people. The only flag which will be flown in that ancient land is their own. Show respect for them."

Iraq was steeped in history, he said. "It is the site of the Garden of Eden, of the Great Flood and the birthplace of Abraham. Tread lightly there. You will see things that no man could pay to see and you will have to go a long way to find a more decent, generous and upright people than the Iraqis. You will be embarrassed by their hospitality, even though they have nothing."

Lt Col Collins exhorted his men: "As for ourselves, let's bring everyone home and leave Iraq a better place for us having been there. Our business now is north."

Taking their leave

Wiltshire-bound: Soldiers of 19th Regiment RA parade on Colchester High Street to say goodbye to the local community before moving to Horne Barracks at Larkhill. The Highland Gunners, who have been based at Kirkee Barracks in the town since 1993, are to be joined in Wiltshire by two further AS90 batteries redeploying from Germany. Commanding officer Lt Col Bill Kingdon, who joined Cllr Nigel Chapman, Mayor of Colchester, to take the salute, said the regiment had enjoyed "a good ten years" in the town and was sorry to be leaving.

Freetown force proves point

Gurkha battalion helps demonstrate UK's commitment to reinforcing UN peacekeeping mission in Sierra Leone

From Jonathan Turner in Freetown
Pictures: Cpl Dave Liddle RLC

TROOPS from the 2nd Battalion, The Royal Gurkha Rifles swapped the cold of their base in Folkestone for the heat of the African bush to test how quickly a British force could reach Sierra Leone.

Supported by a joint task force headquarters based on 19 Mechanized Brigade and the Royal Navy's Type-23 frigate HMS Iron Duke, a company of Gurkhas from the Spearhead Lead Element deployed to Freetown. The Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessel Black Rover accompanied the force.

With an HQ element and supporting logistic and medical personnel, the company group was about 300-strong.

Several of the Gurkhas had been in Freetown during Operation Silkman, helping to train elements of the Republic of Sierra Leone Armed Forces (RSLAF).

The UK has a commitment to the United Nations to provide an "over-the-horizon reserve" for its force in Sierra Leone. If necessary the British Government can deploy up to a brigade to assist the UN effort in a country attempting to shake off decades of civil war.

Maj Ian Poole, spokesman for 19 Mech Bde, said that with all eyes on the Gulf, it was a good time to test the concept. "We are simply proving how fast we can get a force here, despite commitments elsewhere. The first troops were in Freetown just 72 hours after we were told to deploy," he said.

"We've shown we can get here quickly and sustain our force in-theatre for as long as necessary."

Despite several minor incidents on the border with Liberia, and the first arrests ordered by the international special court for war crimes, the security situation in Sierra Leone remains stable.

"The reaction we have had from local people has been very positive," said Maj Poole. "Many of the Gurkhas here now have been to Sierra Leone before and it is fair to say they were very happy to be back."

The task force worked closely with the British-led International Military Advisory and Training Team (IMATT), which is responsible for teaching and advising the RSLAF.

As well as carrying out training, the Gurkhas familiarised themselves with Freetown and the surrounding area. The force also laid on an impressive demonstration of firepower for 150 local dignitaries, UN officials and the RSLAF's elite Force Reconnaissance Unit.

Weaponry on display included Milan anti-tank missiles, mortars and general-purpose machine-guns and an attack by the Iron Duke's Lynx helicopter. But after a decade of civil war in the region, special precautions had to be taken to avoid panicking local people with the noise of heavy gunfire.

"The display lasted for about 90 minutes and there were two days of rehearsals beforehand," said Maj Poole, "so we broadcast warnings on the radio so people would know it was nothing sinister."

Soldiers from 30 Signal Regiment attached to the force HQ repaired a generator at the Milton Margai School for the Blind in Freetown and constructed a shelter for a prize-giving ceremony at the end of March, the first since 1996.

The task force was expected to return to the UK at the end of March.

IN BRIEF

● Maj Gen Nick Cottam, right, whose last appointment was Director Personal Services (Army) at Upavon, has taken over as GOC 5th Division from Maj Gen Arthur Denaro, who has retired from the Army.

● Soldiers of the 1st Battalion, Coldstream Guards, right, the last resident battalion in Londonderry, said farewell to their Ebrington Barracks base with a march-past in aid of local charities. The Coldstream are to move out of the barracks this month, leaving behind HQ 8th Infantry Brigade and a guard force, which will depart when new accommodation at Ballykelly is completed later this year. The 29-acre Ebrington site is to be handed over to the Northern Ireland Executive and returned to the local community.

● Lex Defence, which provides a fleet of more than 12,500 vehicles to the Army Royal Navy and Royal Air Force, presented a cheque for £1,372 to the Services' charity SSAFA-Forces Help during a ceremony at Edinburgh Castle. The money was raised at the Lex Defence White Fleet Christmas party.

Wizard stuff: Section commander Cpl Scott Smith, 1 Hldrs, at Otterburn in front of two Merlin HC Mark 3 helicopters, with which the battalion exercised before its deployment to Bosnia

Highlanders off to the Balkans

AFTER two years carrying out ceremonial duties in Edinburgh, the 1st Battalion, The Highlanders has deployed to Bosnia under new commanding officer Lt Col Tim Lai, R Irish.

The battalion, which replaces the Royal Scots at the Metal Factory base in Banja Luka, faces the prospect of rising tensions during potentially volatile summer elections in the Balkan state.

Firefighting duties under Operation Fresco stretched the Highlanders as they prepared for the tour.

Lt Col Lai, whose last appointment was with the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (Unamsil), said it was the first time the Highlanders had deployed to the Balkans as a full battalion.

Last year B Company, 1 Hldrs, which was reinforcing the Queen's Royal Hussars battle-group at Podujevo in Kosovo, spent three weeks patrolling the tense, ethnically-divided town of Mitrovica in the French-controlled sector of Kosovo.

Arriving in theatre at the same time as the Highlanders will be a squadron of the Royal Air Force's new Merlin HC Mk 3 helicopters, with which the unit exercised during pre-deployment training. The Merlins, from 28 Squadron RAF, will provide a transport capability in Bosnia.

The HC3 offers a wide range of support equipment, including a rescue hoist and a roller floor to assist loading cargo via the rear ramp. The Merlin is the first British military helicopter to be fitted with an air-to-air refuelling probe.

A damping system effectively reduces noise and vibration levels inside the cabin, reducing crew and passenger fatigue and raising comfort levels.

Gurkha terms of service are vindicated by judicial ruling

A JUDICIAL review which vindicated the MoD's position on pay and pensions for Gurkhas by confirming that current arrangements are not discriminatory has been welcomed by the Department.

The ruling by Mr Justice Sullivan followed serious allegations brought against the MoD by the Gurkha Army Ex-Servicemen's Organisation (GAESO) pressure group in connection with the employment of Gurkha soldiers in the British Army.

These ranged from detailed complaints to a more general accusation about an alleged culture of institutional discrimination in the Army in which Gurkhas as a group were systematically given lesser conditions and benefits than other members of the British Army.

The outcome lifts a number of uncertainties that have confronted the Brigade of Gurkhas for some time. Rulings by the judge on married accompanied service are to be studied by the MoD.

Crisis force launched

FIRST steps towards the creation of a 500-man Civil Contingency Reaction Force for the South-East were taken at Ashford TA Centre in Kent last month, during a launch involving MoD and civil emergency planners.

It will be one of 14 nationwide equipped to deal with biological, chemical or nuclear attack as well as civil emergencies. Drawn from specially-trained reserve forces, the CCRF will number 7,000 at full strength.

Regional HQ of the South-East force will be at Howe Barracks, Canterbury.

Barracks opened

MONS Barracks at Aldershot has been formally opened by Defence Secretary Geoff Hoon, who had lunch with the junior ranks of the 1st Battalion, The Royal Welch Fusiliers, the first occupants. It occupies the site of the former Mons Officer Cadet School.

Pader's spring clean

SIXTEEN divers from 35 Engineer Regiment cleared rubbish from the bed of the River Pader at the request of civil authorities at Paderborn. They retrieved dozens of bags of discarded bottles and cans, in addition to abandoned wallets, bank cards, a bicycle and a motorbike.

Drummers in the City

A YOUNG drummers' day was hosted at Finsbury Barracks in the City of London by the Honourable Artillery Company, assisted by the Army School of Drumming. About 50 youngsters from several cadet force bands were coached by Cpl Warren Alexander-Pye under the direction of Dum Maj Simon Ball, both of the HAC.

Colours laid up

THE old Colours of the Scots Guards have been laid up in Canongate Kirk on Edinburgh's Royal Mile. The regiment received new Colours from the Queen last year. The Scots Guards' links with the kirk date back to 1890 when the regiment was stationed in the city.

Under Big Ben

A digest of what's being said on Army matters in Parliament

Welfare will replace LOA for Gulf units

TROOPS deployed in the Gulf will usually not receive local overseas allowance (LOA) as the operational welfare package (OWP) will be available to most of those on operations. LOA, a tax-free cost-of-living addition, is paid only when personnel incur greater day-to-day expenditure overseas than they would in the UK.

For those temporarily away from their permanent LOA-earning duty station, the full rate will continue for the first 17 days of the deployment while married accompanied personnel will continue to receive the whole amount unless their spouse also leaves the permanent duty station.

Single or married unaccompanied personnel lose 20 per cent of full LOA after 17 days.

And I quote...

It cannot be repeated often enough that all the conflicts in which British forces and the United Nations have been involved over the past 12 years happen to have been ones in which the victims of aggression were people of the Islamic faith and the people who were saved from that aggression were people of the Islamic faith. — Foreign Secretary Jack Straw

E-mail facilities: One e-mail terminal is being made available for about every 100 soldiers in the Gulf. E-mails are not censored.

Goggles: Of 25,000 pairs of desert goggles ordered for troops deployed in Kuwait, 21,380 pairs had been issued by March 17.

Bowman: Soldiers from 1 R Anglian are to begin Bowman conversion and training in July before operational field trials in November. Plans to introduce the tactical communications system between 2004 and 2007 are on schedule.

Sapper tanks: The Trojan and Titan engineer tank systems ordered by the MoD are forecast to enter service in October 2005. They will be assigned to Royal Engineer close support regiments. Trojan replaces the Chieftain armoured vehicle (ChAVRE), Titan the Chieftain armoured vehicle launch bridge (ChAVLB).

Shortfall: The whole Army strength on January 1 stood at 102,800, a shortfall of 4,180.

Called up: A new call-out order, dated March 1, was made so reservists can continue to be called up to support operations in Sierra Leone and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. There are no plans to call reservists up compulsorily under this order.

Over-60s: Forty Non-Regular Permanent Staff (NRPS) aged over 60 were employed in the Territorial Army as at January 1.

Barry flies into record books

LYNX pilot WO2 Barry Jones, right, of 9 Regiment AAC, has broken the world distance record for an autogiro. He flew his tiny aircraft, Global Eagle, the 585 miles from RAF Culdrose in Cornwall to Wick in Scotland, smashing the record by more than 40 miles. The flight lasted just over eight hours.

WO2 Jones's attempt to fly around the world in 80 days in Global Eagle (see Soldier, Feb) has been put on hold until June because of the Iraq situation.

A new deal for partners

Unmarrieds to be eligible for pension benefits

UNMARRIED partners in "substantial relationships" with soldiers killed as a result of conflict-related service are to receive pension benefits.

Eligibility will depend on a case-by-case assessment of each relationship against a set of criteria to include factors such as duration, children, financial dependence and shared mortgages.

The measures, brought into effect on March 20 – the first day of hostilities in the Gulf – are designed to meet the concerns of Service personnel whose long-term, unmarried partners have until now been ineligible for the benefits.

Eligible partners will be awarded payments equivalent to attributable benefits payable to spouses under the Armed Forces Pension Scheme. The payments will be ex-gratia and eligibility will be assessed on a case-by-case basis against a set of criteria. In the longer term, the issue is being addressed by reviews of Armed Forces pension and compensation arrangements.

To establish that there is a substantial relationship, eligibility to such benefits will be assessed on a case-by-case basis. Evidence will be considered against a range of stipulations, including factors such as children, financial dependence or inter-dependence, shared commitments such as a mortgage, prime beneficiary of a will, shared accommodation, the length of the relationship and no legal spouse (on either side).

Decisions on eligibility will be based on a broad assessment of the substance of the relationship and, with the exception of single status, not all the criteria would need to be met.

Welfare officers will be instructed on the extension to unmarried partners to ensure partners who may be eligible are notified of available benefits quickly.

General queries should be directed to personnel branches. As this policy is new, it will take time for detailed advice to be available, although further guidance will be issued to personnel branches in due course.

Fresco units stood down

NEARLY 19,000 Service personnel were stood down from Operation Fresco a day before a planned 24-hour strike set for March 20 was called off after fire union leaders recommended their members accept a new deal.

But the offer was turned down and further industrial action has not been ruled out.

Haslar hospital's 250 celebrations on hold

EVENTS planned to mark the 250th anniversary of the Royal Hospital Haslar have been postponed because of the Iraq crisis. Many of the hospital's military staff have deployed to the Gulf.

However, the BBC Antiques Roadshow on June 19 and the Haslar fête on July 12 will go ahead at the hospital at Gosport, Hampshire.

The Royal Naval Hospital Haslar (it became the Royal Hospital Haslar in 1995) accepted its first patients in 1753 and by the time the main part of the hospital was completed in 1762, it had beds for 1,800 patients.

Until the middle of the 20th century, Haslar remained a military hospital. Now it is also a civilian establishment, staffed by military and National Health service personnel.

In 1998 it was announced that Haslar will be closed when a rebuild of Queen Alexandra Hospital at Cosham, Portsmouth is completed in 2007-08.

Identical terms for all Service nurses

TERMS of service for nurses joining Queen Alexandra's Royal Army Nursing Corps after April 1 will be brought in line with their counterparts in the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force. Common terms of service developed by the Defence Medical Service (DMS) aim to remove long-standing differences between the Services. Army nurses will remain in the Pay 2000 structure and within the Armed Forces Pension Scheme. The changes will not affect those already serving.

Leaflets outlining the new terms are to be issued through the chain of command.

E-learning all the rage

THREE hundred soldiers and family members have gone online to pass European Computer Driving Licence (ECDL) qualifications in the past six months at one of the many Army Learning Centres established in military garrisons.

More than 700 on-line courses are available through the Government-funded Learndirect e-learning programme at learning centres and access points all over the UK, Northern Ireland and Germany.

They range from numeracy to literacy, ITC use to business and management, and a Higher National Certificate course in business computing. Most are offered free of charge. Personnel who are not stationed close to a learning centre can still take advantage of courses via the Virtual Learning Centre and the internet. Courses can be downloaded anywhere.

For more information call 0870 9090432 or contact your nearest Army Education Centre.

First winner of the regular draws for those who complete an ECDL course was SSgt Leon Lyall, AGC (SPS), who did his at the Tidworth centre. He received a hand-held computer from Brig Mark Filler, Director Education and Training Services (Army).

FANY says farewell to Chelsea

FIRST Aid Nursing Yeomanry members Katie Garrod, left, and Annabel Barnes form up for the last time at The Duke of York's HQ in London. The FANY moved last month to new headquarters at the TA centre at Horseferry Road, Victoria.

The Duke of York's HQ in Chelsea has been home to the unit for more than 30 years. Founded in 1907, the FANY – the only all-female yeomanry unit in the country – is a volunteer corps with a civil and military role, specialising in communications for the City of London Police as well as the Army.

Our team in the Gulf

REPORTING the war for Soldier are writer Andy Simms, top, and photographer Mike Weston.

As this edition went to press they were preparing to move north from an Army field press information centre close to the Iraqi border.

The stories on the following pages were written by Andy and many are illustrated by Mike's photographs. Additional pictures were provided by military photographers, including Cpl Paul Jarvis RLC and Sgt Teresa Pickin RLC, attached to other formations. The 29 Commando Regiment RA photographs on Page 19 were taken by a member of 8 (Alma) Battery.

What shortages?

Troops deny they are suffering from a lack of food, water and welfare facilities

MEDIA reports slamming the British Army for denying their own troops the basic necessities of life while deployed in the Gulf have been met with derision by the soldiers themselves.

Contrary to endless column inches in the national and international press detailing shortages of fresh food, water and toilet rolls, members of the 6,500-strong 7 Armoured Brigade based in and around Camp Coyote, approximately 40km south of the Iraqi border, are content with life in the Kuwaiti desert and dismiss any talk of their supposed "plight" for home comforts.

Housed in tented accommodation with access to portable toilets and, on a number of British camps, shower facilities, the soldiers have an abundance of drinking water, fresh rations for breakfast and dinner, and an American MRE (Meal Ready to Eat) for lunch each day.

In addition, mobile generators provide camps with constant electricity and welfare telephones, and the tried-and-tested bluey and e-bluey services ensure that troops can periodically contact friends and family back home.

"People need to remember that we only got the call to deploy just over two months ago and since then we have had to move tens of thousands of troops, hundreds of armoured personnel vehicles and even more soft-skinned vehicles into theatre," explained brigade spokesman Maj Joe Carnegie, 1 R Anglian.

"Op Telic represents the largest deployment of British troops for more than a decade and, bearing in mind the time-frame, it was inevitable that there would be some shortages.

"However, the British soldiers have just accepted that and done their best to get on with things until supplies arrive, which they are continuing to do so.

"The guys with the rough end of the stick are those in the battle-groups, who are living off their vehicles outside the main camps. But that is what they are used to and is something they do on exercises and operations all around the world," he said. "As a result, I think it is fair to say that soldiers are actually quite annoyed with all the negative stories doing the rounds back in the UK.

"Nobody is denying that conditions here are harsh – troops have had to endure a lot of sandstorms and it is getting hotter by the day, but despite that morale is very high because most soldiers came here expecting the bare minimum and in reality they are getting a lot more."

This was welcomed by Maj Sean McEvly RGJ, who helped to mastermind and implement the welfare package currently on offer to soldiers in-theatre.

"Before deployment we gave out short-wave radios to soldiers so that they could listen to the BBC World Service, BFBS radio and an American forces' network while in the desert, and since arriving in theatre we have introduced a number of other welfare benefits.

"Just like any other operational tour each individual is being provided with a 20-minute phone card each week, we now have newspapers coming through, albeit several days late, and we are now beginning to provide camps with televisions and DVD players.

"Given the time this operation has been going, I think there is parity between what we have now to what we had at this particular stage of respective operations in Bosnia and Kosovo."

Here's what we think of the situation

LCpl Martin Britton, 42 Fd Spt Sqn, 28 Engr Regt

I went to Oman in 2001 and am having no problems adapting to life in the desert – I knew exactly what to expect. The weather's hot and the food is fine – what more could a soldier ask for?

Pte Peter Easton, 1 LI

Life in the desert is nothing like some of the accounts being painted by the media back at home. Personally speaking I have no complaints whatsoever about the living conditions and welfare package here in Kuwait. We get 20 minutes of phone calls a week and the e-bluey system seems to be working well – things that are regarded as luxuries for most soldiers.

Spr Paul Walker, 35 Engr Regt att 65 Fd Spt Sqn, 28 Engr Regt

Adapting to life in the desert has been fairly easy, with the heat being the only real problem. We get sufficient water and food and I personally believe that the media have taken stories about supposed shortages a little bit too far. At the end of the day we are soldiers and do not expect to live a life of luxury on operations.

LCpl Alex Fry, 209 Wksp Coy, 104 Bn REME (V)

I've got no complaints about the conditions out here; we are provided with good meals three times a day and have tents to sleep in – so there are no real problems. As for any other hardships... we're in the desert and you just have to put up with the heat and sand.

Sound and fury: Gun crews of 8 (Alma) Commando Battery RA, part of 29 Cdo Regt RA, above and right, engage on a fireplan in the Kuwaiti desert

Green beret gunners first in field

AMONG the first British Army units to deploy to Kuwait were the gunners of 29 Commando Regiment, RA, part of 3 Commando Brigade.

Based in Plymouth, the regiment also has 148 (Meiktila) Commando Battery in Poole and 7 (Sphinx) Commando Battery in Arbroath. It is equipped with 18 105mm light guns, with six guns to a battery. Every member of the regiment, which provides artillery support to the brigade, will have won a green beret at the Commando Training Centre Royal Marines in Lympstone.

First to deploy to the desert was 8

(Alma) Cdo Bty, who sailed to the Middle East, where they were joined by the rest of the regiment, who were flown out.

For this mission, 7 (Sphinx) Cdo Bty is supporting 42 Commando RM, with 8 (Alma) Bty attached to 40 Cdo and 148 (Mektelia) Cdo Bty linking naval gunfire support to the brigade. This is supported by 23 (Gibraltar) Cdo Bty, which provides command and control with an AGC field detachment, a REME workshop and an RLC section.

For Op Telic, each gun battery has been deployed with eight guns manned by members of 79 (Kirkee) Cdo Bty.

Order of battle

ARMY units deployed on Operation Telic and omitted from the list published in Soldier (March) include those attached to 3 Commando Brigade. They are:

- 29 Commando Regiment RA
- 50 Independent Cdo Sqn RE
- Elements of the AGC, REME and RLC

● 120 Army personnel serving with the Combat Service Support elements of the Commando Logistic Regiment RM

Also omitted were:

21st Signal Regiment (Air Support)
101 Military Working Dog Support Unit, in support of 102 Logistic Brigade.

(If your unit was not in the official list supplied to us for the March issue, let us know and we will include it).

Sappers in at deep end

SAPPERS from 36 Engineer Regiment declared themselves ready for any task 1(UK) Armoured Division threw at them after a period of intensive acclimatisation and training in the desert.

Some members of the regiment were already used to warmer climes. Thirteen combat engineers serving with 1 Troop were two months into a six-month United Nations tour attached to 47th Regiment RA in Cyprus when they got the call to cancel adventurous training and leave to join their regimental colleagues in Kuwait.

Maidstone-based 69 Gurkha Field Squadron, The Queen's Gurkha Engineers, arrived in the desert during a period of rain, strong winds and sandstorms, then worked round the clock for 48 hours within the Hammersmith Force Tactical Assembly Area to construct on a graded sand area large-scale Bedouin-type tented accommodation for 620 personnel. As a tribute to their hard work, the Gurkhas have the only camp in theatre with no name. It is called Camp Nam Chhaina (Nepali for "no name").

The Gurkhas also built the first firing range in theatre, which was soon opened by troops from 16 Air Assault Brigade.

As the Joint Force Enabling Squadron, the Gurkhas have had a hand in all the camps that have sprung up in-theatre.

A priority mission for the sappers was to construct 25- and 200-bed field hospitals in Hammersmith TAA.

They also put in place blast protection in the port area, using a civilian crane to lift the huge Alaska barriers into place.

Smaller tasks included building an access road for the divisional support fuel tankers, grading a wide area for the REME Workshops and over-bridging the Kuwaiti oil pipelines in the north.

Other tasks ranged from building security areas to burying dead livestock.

Training for the Royal Engineers included reacquainting themselves with the assembly of the eight-bay medium girder bridge, desert survival and navigation, convoy and harbour drills, mine-awareness training and exercising for operational missions.

Sandy Times makes desert comeback

FAMILIES and friends who want to send messages to loved ones in the Gulf can do so through the pages of The Sandy Times, which has been resurrected for the duration.

The weekly A4 newsletter, edited by former Soldier journalist Graham Bound, now with MoD's Focus newspaper, is being printed locally in Qatar. In all, 15,000 copies of the full-colour, glossy publication are being distributed to troops theatre-wide. A digital version is being sent to warships in the area.

Based on the publication of the same name established during the 1990-91 crisis, the first 12-page edition of the "new" paper was given the number 26. The last edition - No 25 - was printed on March 17, 1991.

To get a brief message printed in the "Home calling" section of the newsletter, e-mail thesandytimes@hotmail.com have been sent to the Middle East.

The package includes a comprehensive range of feature films, popular TV shows and sports programmes. A BFBS radio studio has also been set up in Kuwait and is broadcasting news, dedications, messages, requests, music and special programmes for troops based in the Gulf.

BFBS's Gulf request hotline can be accessed via www.bfbs.com or phone 01494 878877. Requests can be heard in the UK on Virgin Radio, which has teamed up with BFBS, as has the Steve Wright Sunday Love Songs show on BBC Radio 2.

GARRISON Radio has launched a two-way service that will allow soldiers serving in the Gulf and their families to send messages to each other.

The station will also deliver e-mails to families in the four main garrison areas who do not have e-mail access.

A dedicated Gulf message board can be found on Garrison Radio's website at www.garrisonradio.com; alternatively soldiers and families can e-mail messages to gulfrequests@garrisonradio.com, send text messages on 07769 572230 or call the Gulf message line on 01748 872444 or (mil) 94731 2444.

● Garrison Radio is putting out a nightly Nepali-language show for Gurkha soldiers and families stationed in the Aldershot area. It is aimed mainly at all ranks of 28 Transport Squadron, The Queen's Own Gurkha Logistic Regiment, now in the Gulf.

Firepower: Challenger 2 uses DU ammunition to knock-out armour

DU: What to do if you come across it

BRITAIN'S Armed Forces use depleted uranium (DU) ammunition because it is the most effective material available. Almost twice as dense as lead, it is highly valued for its ability to punch through armoured vehicles.

The types of DU ammunition used by British forces are 120mm anti-tank rounds fired by Challenger 2 tanks and 20mm rounds used by the Royal Navy's Phalanx missile defence system.

When a DU weapon strikes a solid object, it goes straight through it and then erupts as a cloud of burning vapour. The vapour settles as dust, which is radioactive and poisonous if inhaled or ingested.

The medical services have this advice on how to avoid unnecessary exposure to contaminated dust:

"If you do not need to enter vehicles or buildings destroyed or damaged by DU rounds, stay well away and do not pick up shrapnel or souvenirs. If you have to enter a contamination area you should cover all exposed skin, especially any open cuts or wounds. You should wear your issued NBC gloves and the special issue face mask.

"On completion of your task, or as soon as possible afterwards, you should change and wash your outer clothing. You should wash your hands before you eat, drink or smoke. This will prevent any contaminated dust entering your body.

"If you think you have been exposed to DU contact, ask your medical officer for advice immediately."

The risk from DU is small, but these simple procedures should be carried out to avoid unnecessary exposure.

Media offered ringside seat

Pioneering press information centre offers first port of call for journalists in the field

TELEVISION crews and journalists have been granted unprecedented access to British Army units operating in the Gulf thanks to the formation of a Field Press Information Centre (FPIC).

The pioneering facility, which was trialled during Exercise Saif Sareea 18 months ago, is collocated with 1 (UK) Armoured Division's Support Group close to the Iraqi border in Kuwait to provide media organisations with a "ringside seat" to observe operational activity.

Run by a team of staff from the Territorial Army's Media Operations Group, the FPIC provides a first port of call for officially-registered war correspondents and roving reporters from across the globe, and offers them daily operational briefings and interviews.

The facility's director, Lt Col Sean Tully RLC, told Soldier: "This is the first time that the British Army has ever had a PIC actually in the field in-theatre. It is an innovation that will bring journalists not to the heart of the battle, but as near to it as possible. The MoD has subscribed to a means whereby 140 journalists have been embedded with front-line units – and these correspondents are expected to meld with the troops and live, work, sleep and eat with them.

"The FPIC will provide a central hub for these correspondents to broadcast and transmit information back to the UK, and because it has communications back to the National Coalition Centre in Qatar, the PIC in Kuwait, the MoD in London and the soldiers in the desert, it will be the ideal place for reporters to obtain an overview of any military operations," he said.

"We have got the capability to talk to all of these people and will therefore be able to supply journalists with the answers to their questions."

As well as accommodating reporters from the BBC, Sky News, ITN, Soldier and others, the FPIC is also home to a crew from the European Broadcast

Lt Col Sean Tully

All together now: Troops erect the FPIC tents in readiness for visits from the world's press

On camera: Maj Gen Robin Brims, commanding HQ 1 (UK) Armoured Division, faces the media at the Field Press Information Centre

Union – a non-profit making media organisation which offers lone journalists access to camera and broadcast equipment.

The plan was for the centre itself to move forward with the Division Support Group (DSG) but the FPIC is also served by a fleet of 40 vehicles, including three Enhanced Protection Vehicle (EPV) Land Rovers, which can be used to ferry journalists to and from units in the field.

"The main aim of the FPIC is to be accessible to the media in general," explained Lt Col Tully.

"If the Oxford Gazette pitch up and want to talk to Pte Johnny Snodgrass from Abingdon then we will find him, get them out to him or, operations permitting, get him to them.

"We are not here to stifle bad news and the only time information will be censored will be if we consider that it will impede the operation.

"It is hoped that facilities like this will feature in future operations and that it will help foster a spirit of trust between the Army and the media."

Ban on mobiles will prevent Iraq 'tracking' units and save on bills

A DECISION by military commanders to outlaw the use of personal mobile telephones in the Gulf will ensure British soldiers do not return home from the desert to find an astronomical bills awaiting them.

The blanket ban on using mobiles in forward areas was put in place to prevent soldiers from inadvertently leaking sensitive operational information back to the UK and Germany during conversations with friends and family. But it could end up saving troops a small fortune, with mobile phone providers charging as much as £3 a minute for an international call home from Kuwait.

"Soldiers are not being prevented from keeping in touch with their loved ones back at home as they still have access to the welfare phones in theatre," said Maj Joe Carnegie, 1 R Anglian.

"Mobile phones are easily traced and if there was a large number being used in a particular area then it could provide hostile forces with a clear indication of the location of our troops.

"The use of phones could also compromise the Army's tried-and-tested procedures in the unfortunate event of British casualties," he added. "The last thing we want is for individuals to pass news of casualties back home before the next-of-kin have been informed by the correct authorities."

Minimi machine-gun, maximum effect . . .

Familiarisation: Pte Alan Ferrier tries the new Minimi machine-gun on the desert range

Troops test support fire weapon in the desert . . . and like what they find

DESPITE being issued to infantry units only on their arrival in Kuwait, the new 5.56mm Minimi machine-gun has quickly won the respect of British soldiers in the Gulf.

Capable of firing 820 rounds a minute and billed as a possible replacement for the long-serving 7.62mm General Purpose Machine-Gun (GPMG), the Belgian-made weapon completed its British Army debut in far from ideal conditions – the extreme heat and dust of the Kuwaiti desert – but still garnered a big thumbs-up from those firing it for the first time.

“All of the soldiers practised their drills on how to strip and assemble the new weapon using mock-ups back at barracks, but did not get their hands on the real thing until they arrived in theatre,” explained Advanced Skills Arms Instructor CSgt Mark Swift, 1st Battalion, Irish Guards.

CSgt Mark Swift

“During familiarisation shoots on the ranges there has not been a single stoppage and the lads are all very impressed with the weapon’s performance and accuracy.”

Like the GPMG, the Minimi will be used in a supporting fire role and can be pinnacle-mounted on vehicles, but its folding stock and shorter barrel will make it a lot easier for armoured infantry to dismount from their vehicles.

Pte Marcus Williams, 1 LI, told Sol- dier: “Personally I think it is a great weapon and have not had any stoppages or problems. Having seen it operate in the desert, where it’s hot and dusty, I have full confidence in carrying it into combat because, having now fired it, I know it works and works well.”

His ringing endorsement was shared by Pte Wayne Fitzgerald: “The Minimi is a lot lighter than the GPMG, a bit heavier than the LSW and has a tremendous rate of fire – it is a fantastic bit of kit.”

URGENT MESSAGE

Payguard holders

MORE than 900 Payguard Plus insurance policy holders, many of whom may already be in the Gulf, are being urged to contact AFFAS urgently to ensure they still have the cover they want.

Brokers Forces Group Ltd have told the MoD that cover for “war risks” are excluded under the standard terms of Payguard Plus, but may be obtained, subject to the underwriter being given notice of deployment to an operational theatre.

Because it may be difficult for individuals in the Gulf to contact AFFAS, units are being asked to consolidate responses on their behalf. Contact details for AFFAS are 17 Manor Row, Bradford BD1 4PB or tel (+44) 0800 243 592; fax (+44) 01274 720 905.

● Aston Scott Special Risks Ltd has launched a policy called Protect and Serve aimed at Regulars, reserves and MoD personnel and families. It includes cover for war risks on personal possessions, including cover while personnel are under fire or taken prisoner. Details from Jim Westcott or Mrs Chris Pronger on 01732 871000.

Post-a-note to a Gulf soldier

MEMBERS of the public can post goodwill e-mail messages to Servicemen and women in the Gulf on a bulletin board set up by the British Forces Post Office.

The system makes use of BFPO’s e-blue service, which prints the messages out in-theatre and delivers them via the local BFPO office.

To access the e-blue bulletin board, go to www.bfpo.org.uk and click on the e-blue link. Messages are free and can be sent to any of the three Services.

In February, BFPO sent 60,383 blueys by airmail to the Gulf, and between February 1 and March 6, a total of 65,373 e-blueys were downloaded in the Gulf.

While the forces’ postal service cannot accept large parcels for delivery to Op Telic personnel, it can send packets up to 2kg. By mid-March more than 108,337kg had been sent to the Middle East in 13,755 bags.

Bishops give support to Colchester

THE Church of England Bishop of Chelmsford, the Rt Rev John Perry, and the Roman Catholic Bishop of Brentwood, the Rt Rev Thomas McMahon, visited Colchester Garrison to give spiritual, pastoral and moral support to Servicemen and women and their families stationed there.

The Essex town is normally home to nearly 4,000 personnel, about 2,500 of whom are now in Kuwait.

The bishops met garrison commander Col Tony Barton, members of the welfare services and the garrison chaplain, the Rev Nick Cook.

They heard of some the difficulties and stresses facing Army personnel and their families.

LETTER

Soldier website window to Gulf

MY name is Helen and I have lived in Australia for the past three years since marrying my Australian husband. I have a daughter called Katrina, a medic, who is serving on Op Telic.

As I live so far away it is very difficult for me to get accurate info on the troops in the Gulf and, as you can imagine, also very worrying for me. I am also an ex-Servicewoman and I suddenly remembered Soldier magazine from years ago. Out of curiosity I checked the web to see if you had a website.

Suddenly I have more information than I could have hoped for at the click of a button. I just want to say thank you for making things a bit easier for this particular mother at this very worrying time.

Keep up the good work. – Helen Malone (née Wemyss), Australia.

Nasty desert thingies

Iraqi forces are not the only danger to soldiers deployed in the Gulf region

HOME to flesh-eating spiders, packs of wild rabid dogs, venom-filled snakes and scorpions that can inflict temporary paralysis with a single strike of the tail, the Kuwaiti desert's indigenous population could be mistaken for the cast list of a Hammer-horror movie.

And the undoubted villain of the piece in the eyes of most British soldiers is the camel spider, which became part of Army folklore two years ago when troops encountered large numbers of the eight-legged carnivores during Exercise Saif Sareea in Oman.

The palm-sized arachnid injects its prey with anaesthetic before feasting unnoticed on its numbed, often sleeping, dinner host. The camel spider is responsible for many cautious glances around tented accommodation before the lights go out at night.

WO2 Adrian Humphries

"There are a lot of stories going round about a guy getting up in the morning to find no skin on his arm, and another waking up to discover that a spider had eaten the muscle out of his leg," explained WO2 Adrian "Hippo" Humphries, 1

Close Support Medical Regiment, a member of the Army's Environmental Health team in Kuwait.

"Fortunately they are just stories and an exaggeration of a very minor threat. Camel spiders, like most of the other nasties in the desert, will usually only bite you if you go out of your way to upset them.

"The worst case I have ever seen of a camel spider bite is when somebody lost a bit of flesh the size of a five-pence piece from their face while they slept, but it is amazing how word quickly gets round and one bite victim miraculously becomes 50 over night."

WO2 Humphries insists that soldiers should be wary of a far more familiar pest – the common fly. A lapse in the standards of hygiene and poor field skills, combined with the arid climate of the Gulf, could result in a proliferation of flies in camps,

Chemistry set: Maj James Fletcher, above, will assess threats to health in the Gulf

which in turn could bring the British Army's most important asset – soldiers – grinding to a halt.

"Flies can go from being eggs to egg-laying adults in a week so it is easy to see how a camp could quickly become infested if rubbish, waste water and the like are not disposed of properly," he said. "Flies are directly linked with the spread of gastric illnesses such as diarrhoea and vomiting, and once this begins it can be difficult to snuff out.

"Thankfully this message was taken on board early by soldiers arriving in the field, and because we had environmental teams already on the ground, we were able to help enshrine the right ethos in units. Troops in the Gulf have quickly got into the habit of looking after themselves in the right way."

As well as helping to preserve the health of soldiers in Kuwait, the Army's environmental officers, who have been in theatre since January, have also been kept busy

Watch out for:

- Scorpions, which lurk in the sand and can inflict a nasty sting.
- Horned vipers, which hide under the sand in the heat of the day and which have an extremely venomous bite.
- Camel spiders, which are unique to the desert.
- Sandflies, which suck blood and can cause Leishmaniasis disease.

assessing potential risks north of the border.

Maj James Fletcher, HQ 1 (UK) Armoured Division's SO2 Medical Intelligence and Environmental Health officer, told Soldier: "The onward threats in Iraq we have been particularly concerned with are in the field of environmental industrial hazards.

"The southern oilfields, gas and oil separation plants and petrochemical industries present a number of chemical threats," he said. "If they take a hit we could end up with oil heads on fire and a lot of smoke in the air, which is why soldiers have already been provided with two dust masks each."

Canvas city springs up in Cyprus

Sappers and pioneers were among Cyprus-based personnel who worked around the clock to construct a self-contained tented camp at RAF Akrotiri. It will be used as a temporary staging post for troops making their way to the Gulf.

Named Chard Lines after the Royal Engineer who won the Victoria Cross at Rorke's Drift, it can accommodate up to 500 people, complete with living, washing and dining facilities.

Among units involved in its construction were 62 Cyprus Support Squadron RE and Pioneer Platoon, Support Company, 2nd Battalion, The Light Infantry.

Destination Kuwait: The first Challenger 2 from Germany to arrive in the desert rolls off a ship ... the culmination of a major logistical operation

Picture: WO2 Giles Penfound

Loggies stretched by scale of desert move

THE scale and pace of the deployment of men, machines and materiel to Kuwait from Germany stretched the British Army's logisticians to the limit.

Headquarters 1 (UK) Armoured Division, 7 Armoured Brigade and 102 Logistic Brigade were moved – lock, stock and barrel – to the Middle East in a few weeks.

Nineteen ships packed with armour, vehicles and equipment sailed from Emden. Key to the move by sea and air were soldiers of 24 Regiment RLC, part of 104 Logistic Brigade; 170 Pioneer Squadron; ARRC Support Battalion; and planners based at HQ UKSC(G), JHQ Rheindahlen.

To cope with the massive influx into Emden, an area of the port was controlled by a task group headed by 170 Pioneer Squadron, ARRC Support Battalion. It deployed 100 personnel to sustain 24-hour-a-day operations, taking on tasks ranging from painting more than 500 vehicles in desert camouflage to up-armouring the Warrior fleet.

Coordination of 24-hour loading was done by the movements staff from 24 Regt RLC.

The variety of ships presented problems of squeezing entire battle-groups into some-

EMDEN

● Col Jonathan Watson, chief of staff at HQ UKSC(G), said: "It was the British Army at its typical best: adapting, improvising and overcoming despite the fact that everything appeared to be happening outside the normal planning assumptions. The philosophy behind the whole deployment was 'if it's not going to work, it won't be because of me'. When you adopt that approach, achieving the objective is the inevitable outcome."

times unusual vessels. "Hot planning was the order of the day when either military priorities changed or ships and aircraft were delayed," said Capt Mark John, in charge of the Movement Control Centre in Bielefeld.

He said 69 Movement Control Squadron RLC had been stretched to the four corners of British Forces Germany to cover movement control tasks at railheads, airports and the port of Emden.

Specialists from 623 Vehicle Troop, 6 Supply Regiment RLC, loaded 1,029 armoured and 2,926 wheeled vehicles as well as 215 pieces of engineer and specialist kit.

Twenty-three trains shifted the force to Emden in the largest move in Germany since the last Gulf conflict. The size of the operation stretched the resources of not just the British Army but also Germany's national rail company.

As the last vessel sailed out of Emden the effort changed to the deployment of personnel to meet ships berthing in Kuwait. A mixture of RAF and civilian charter aircraft flew from Hannover in a deployment coordinated by the RAF airport unit at Hannover and an airport task group from 24 Regt RLC.

Up to 900 soldiers were flown out a day.

MARCHWOOD

LOGGIES at Marchwood Military Port near Southampton put in almost 20,000 man-hours in a 40-day period during the height of the Operation Telic movement of vehicles, stores and ammunition to the Gulf.

Reinforcing personnel of 17 Port and Maritime Regiment RLC, which deployed in strength to Kuwait a few days after the Marchwood operation began, were Territorial Army soldiers from 165 Port Regiment RLC (V). The terriers, in fact, undertook the lion's share of the work at the military port.

The RLC soldiers loaded 4,350 vehicles, ranging from armoured personnel carriers and reconnaissance to Land Rovers, plus 2,400 trailers and 1,700 containers, on to 40 vessels. In all, 32 ships were dispatched from Marchwood and another eight from Southampton.

The total of 55,000 tonnes of freight and 3,000 tonnes of ammunition included 4,800 items of cargo from bridges to helicopters.

In addition the Marchwood loggies handled more than 3,000 deliveries by truck and six train-loads of freight.

Cat laws will create flap for families in Germany

Doggie 'doors' could be next on agenda

BRITISH soldiers and their families based in Germany will be hit by a one-off bill of up to £100 if a local animal rights group gets its way.

And the measure could spread across the Channel to the UK.

The little-known Deutsche Katze Tierhilfe Vollziehende Behörde (German Cats Welfare Enforcement Authority), an extreme pressure group, has convinced German state authorities that every house must have a cat-flap installed. If legislation is enacted it would affect every Service quarter in the country.

Installation of the cat-flaps is expected to cost about €150 (£100).

Herr Sherz der Lachen, a spokesperson for DKTVB, said that well-documented instances in which cats had been locked inside premises had highlighted the need for compulsory access.

"The pussy cat is an intelligent creature and the flaps will enable them to get out should they inadvertently be shut inside."

So strong is local feeling that the German länder (state authorities) are proposing that every property in Germany should be subject to compulsory new regulations to be introduced at the beginning of this month. Occupants will be given a year to make the necessary alterations, after which fines could be levied or resident felines confiscated and re-housed.

Animal rights groups in the UK have been taking a keen interest in the German exercise and are already applying pressure to introduce similar legislation into Britain.

This, however, may not be the end of the matter. It is understood that canine welfare organisations are insisting the laws should be extended to dogs in situations where the exit gives access to a safe environment, such as an enclosed garden or yard.

But whereas the relatively small range of cat sizes enables flap manufacturers to produce a standard product, it remains to be seen whether they can cater for dogs ranging from tiny chihuahuas to great danes the size of small ponies.

Manage your money

Credit Action Director Keith Tondeur will be pleased to answer, in confidence, specific questions addressed to the Editor.

Unread small print nearly cost Sharon a lot of money

SHARON, the wife of Corporal T, was quite good at handling money so her husband was more than happy to let her get on with it. She made the major spending decisions even though they would often discuss what exactly their young family needed.

About a year ago it became clear to them that their old settee was on its last legs and urgently needed replacing. Years of the children bouncing on it and spilling food had taken its toll. One weekend they went into town and found a sofa they wanted.

SPECIAL TERMS

The only problem was that it was quite a bit more than they had intended to pay. Given the real possibility that they couldn't afford it and would walk away, the salesman produced an offer which they felt they couldn't refuse. He said they could buy the item on "special terms".

"Just what are these special terms?" Sharon asked. "Well, you don't have to pay anything for six months and then you just make regular payments over 12 months and you won't be charged any interest," he replied.

Sharon thought this was such a good deal they signed on the spot. Soon the settee was delivered and they were very happy with it. Sharon knew that they would have to start paying for it in six months' time but expected that the finance company would notify her when the first payment was due.

HORRIFIED

Unfortunately she had not read her contract, which would have told her it was down to her to make a note of when the first payment was due and to make sure it was paid on time. She was horrified to receive a letter saying they had missed the first payment date and now had to pay additional interest of almost £1,000.

With her husband away on exercise she began to despair but found the Credit Action booklet and rang the number given in it for help. Fortunately the Credit Action people were able to put pressure on the finance company to accept the original terms of the contract.

Sharon started to make the monthly payments promptly by standing order and the crisis was over.

Staffords switch from ground-holding role to pan-Balkan duties as UK troop levels reduce

Reports: Ray Routledge
Pictures: Steve Dock

KOSOVANS no longer have the reassuring sight of British soldiers on peacekeeping patrols.

After nearly four years in the province, the British Army's round-the-clock presence is a thing of the past. The last unit to have a ground-holding role in Kosovo is the 1st Battalion The Staffordshire Regiment.

Following the hand-over last year of the northern district of Podujevo to a Czech battle-group, the UK brigade command in Pristina is being transferred to Finland. Swedish soldiers have taken over patrol duties vacated by the Staffords.

While the move heralds a raft of changes in Kosovo, and a major reduction in British soldiers on the ground, it is not the end of the UK's involvement in the area. New challenges await the Staffords, and those who follow them, as they become, briefly, the Operational Readiness Force (ORF) for the whole of the Balkans before forming a strategic reserve.

The changes follow a Nato review published last June. Although there will be a significant reduction in the numbers of British soldiers in Kosovo no major changes to the structure of the Kosovo Stabilization Force (Kfor) were planned, said Maj Graham Dunlop, R Irish, spokesman for the Multi-National Brigade Centre (MNB(C)) in Pristina.

It will still comprise four brigades and the multi-national partners will remain the same – Sweden, Norway, Finland, the Czech Republic and Britain.

While there will no longer be a UK-led brigade HQ and no UK ground-holding troops, British duties will switch to Nato's ORF. The Staffords, the first to take up the reins, will be followed in early summer by the 1st Battalion, The Duke of Wellington's Regiment.

Troubleshooter:
Capt David Jones

"We handed Pristina to Swedish and Norwegian battalions in January and became the ORF in February," said Capt David Jones, 1 Staffords. Based in Kosovo, his battalion now becomes the pan-Balkan troubleshooter, capable of moving swiftly to flashpoints in both Kosovo and Bosnia.

"The ORF is highly flexible, highly mobile and able to respond anywhere in the Balkans at short notice," said Capt Jones. It can have advance recon troops in position in 12 hours, a company in situ in four days and the remainder of the force in place within seven.

ORF units could be used as reinforcements or to help, for example, with riot control or during local elections.

"We would only be called upon when all the reserves in the particular theatre had been used already," said Capt Jones.

To keep sharp, the Staffords have been conducting low-level training, including live firing and map-reading.

SOLDIERS from 1st Battalion, The Staffordshire Regiment took part in the pre-dawn arrests of three former Kosovo Liberation Army rebels.

The three are indicted for war crimes committed against Serb and ethnic Albanian civilians between May and July 1998.

They are believed to be former guards

Exercise Rapid Guardian gave them a chance to rehearse the ORF role, relocating the 530-strong unit from Pristina to a forward operating base at Klinja in Italian-held ground in MNB(South West). The exercise, based on an operational tasking and using current intelligence, involved the Staffords in patrolling and talking to local people.

Before Christmas they practised their pan-Balkan role by deploying a company and a battalion HQ to Tuzla in Bosnia, the or commanders who served with the Kosovo Liberation Army at the Llapushnik prison camp in Glogovac.

A fourth suspect, who gave the authorities the slip in Kosovo, later surrendered to police in Austria.

It was the first time that former members of the KLA had been held on charges filed by the UN war crimes tribunal.

heart of the American-controlled sector.

The UK's ORF role is for the short-term only because the commitment is due to pass to the Americans at the end of June, at which time 1 DWR is to move to a strategic reserve role.

British-owned barracks and offices at Slim Lines and Murphy Lines in Pristina are being leased by the Finns and Swedes. The former will install their own communications networks before UK assets are stripped out. Finnish soldiers have already begun constructing their main creature comfort – saunas.

Kiddy patrol: A familiar sight in Kosovo as local children join in an Anglo-Swedish patrol

The change will happen on April 15.

British troop levels in Kosovo are reducing from last autumn's 1,394 to about 450, said Capt Scott Gilbert, 1 R Irish, a former Australian Army officer serving with MNB HQ. Much of this has been achieved by cutting out the duplication of admin support which existed in the two theatres, Kosovo and Bosnia.

Reductions include signallers downsizing from 120 soldiers to 24, and the RMP from 28 to ten.

There is still a long way to go in Kosovo before normality returns, and until that happens a framework is in place to protect everyone. The final state of Kosovo has not been determined: it is still technically part of Serbia and inter-ethnic conflict, smuggling and crime remain serious problems.

The Scandinavian soldiers replacing the British are professional, have a similar sense of humour and bring a cool "can-do" attitude to the job. The Norwegians, for example, have a mix of professional and conscript soldiers and many volunteers for the 12-month tour of Kosovo. Some are on a third tour.

While the British Army prides itself on experience of peace support operations conducted in Northern Ireland, Sierra Leone and other areas, the Swedes can draw on equally valid experience in regions such as the Congo and Lebanon.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO BE ON THE FRONT LINE TO BE PART OF THE ACTION.

Kosovo cops

Kfor's international police force has its work cut out to curb local drivers

THE security manager at the Hotel Illuria in downtown Pristina looked worried. Kfor policemen had summoned him to the front desk.

But he relaxed when he discovered it was a courtesy call to find out if he'd had any problems with Kfor soldiers. He hadn't and with a smile invited the patrol to visit whenever they chose.

The patrol – call sign 13 Charlie and made up of Cpl Matt Powell, 160 Provost Company RMP, Cpl Kjell Hornung, Norwegian Military Police, and interpreter Gaz Mandisufi – moved on.

They spotted a soldier browsing at a CD stall in the city centre. A word in his ear and he went on his way.

"He was a Greek on loan to the UN," explained Cpl Powell. "He has a force exemption card so is allowed to come downtown, but with certain provisos. He was alone and with an unloaded weapon and that could be dangerous. He has only been here for a week so he doesn't know what the score is.

"We put him right. No fuss, no trouble."

The score for Kfor isn't clear-cut, but it is generally accepted that there is a no walking-out policy. MPs patrol Pristina and call at bars and restaurants popular with Kfor soldiers and civilians in the past. If they find Kfor vehicles or personnel who don't have a legitimate reason for being there, they are reported to the chain of command.

A year ago, military policing consisted of national contingents. Now those elements have come together to form a Multi-National Police Force (MNP) of 86 officers, 28 of them British. Norway is the lead nation, with Sweden, Finland, Latvia and the Czech Republic also contributing personnel.

Capt Dave Austin, from 150 Provost Company, part of Aldershot-based 3 RMP, said the unit's main role was to police Kfor, supporting the Kosovo Police Service (KPS) and UN Police (UNMIK) when necessary.

"Generally we don't deal with the local population, which is policed by UNMIK or the KPS," he said. "We don't have powers of arrest but we can detain people from any nationality and hand them over to the appropriate military police or, in the case of a civilian, to the KPS."

Although the force does not have its own gaol, they can use the American stockade at Camp Bondsteel.

"The biggest problem we have is road traffic accidents and the main cause of those is the standard of local driving and, in winter, road conditions," said Capt Austin. Drivers in Bosnia and Kosovo are reckoned to be among Europe's worst.

"A lot of accidents involve local people driving into Kfor vehicles, not the other way around," he said. To make sure Kfor soldiers play their part, the MPs regularly set speed traps, which is where 13 Charlie ended its patrol, assisting Swedish and Latvian officers with a speed check on Route Hawk, the main road south from Pristina to Macedonia.

They chose an accident blackspot on a busy junction with a 40mph restriction. After a few minutes they pulled over a minibus carrying Norwegian soldiers. It was followed by jeeps containing Ukrainian, Norwegian and French gendarmerie.

None were booked... this time.

International truckers: Pte Marc Johnson from F Troop, 13 Sqn, 8 Tpt Coy is joined by northern European colleagues in the Multi-National Transport Company at Murphy Lines, Pristina

Military bulk transport in Kosovo is based on cooperation

CATCHING a military bus in Kosovo? In the past you might have enjoyed a few words of banter with the driver before setting off.

Now the man behind the wheel could be from Finland – and the water bowser which has just turned up is driven by a Norwegian.

Transport in Kosovo has gone multi-national. However, British drivers still play a significant role. "We fuel the whole brigade," said Sgt Anthony Brewster, 13 Transport Squadron, 8 Transport Regiment based in Catterick and serving with the Multi-National Transport Company in Pristina.

They deliver more than two million litres of diesel a month and cover about 8,000km in the process.

Although several nations contribute to the company, each sticks to its own vehicles to satisfy insurance requirements.

Each nation specialises in one element of transport – hence the Finns do people while the British do fuel.

"We have Norwegians, Finns, Swedes, Czechs and British in the company. They all have their own vehicles and their own way of doing things."

Soldiers of other nationalities can ride in the cab and act as a driver's mate, providing they have been trained in dealing with hazardous materials.

While British trucks compare well with continental counterparts (their tyres are reckoned to be better), UK soldiers have identified areas for improvement. Many revolve around creature comforts.

We deliver: Sgt Anthony Brewster

"They have CD players, GPS, electric windows and air conditioning," said Pte Lewis Bass. "They might seem unimportant, but when a driver is on the road for several hours a day, they make life a little easier."

The Finns are the lead element of the MNTC operation although the common language among the drivers and in the operations room, manned 24 hours a day, is English.

THE FUEL MAN

TUCKED away in a corner of the transport company compound is a small laboratory. It is the lair of Cpl Mark Carlisle, UK Combat Service Support, who tests fuel, from naval aviation to petrols and diesels.

Cpl Carlisle said: "The fuel is bought locally and at times it isn't very good. This facility ensures it meets our standards, especially aviation fuel which has to be spot-on."

He checks elements such as freezing points and contamination. If impurities are found, the fuel can sometimes be blended to make it usable.

Man who can't stop

The latest in our series finds a major who just won't retire

SOME people just don't know when to hang up their boots, writes Ray Routledge.

Take Maj Vincent Ward. Although he retired from the Army in 1978 at the age of 51 he has never considered putting his feet up and is still working today at the age of 75.

Vincent's military career began as a private soldier in The Durham Light Infantry, although he soon transferred to the Royal Army Dental Corps, in which he was to spend the rest of his 31 years in the Army.

"In those days if you could do joined-up writing they moved you to a specialist corps," he joked.

"I became a dental clerk assistant, which meant about 20 per cent of my work was assisting the dentist at chair-side."

On leaving the Army he joined National Medical Enterprises, one of the largest health-care organisations in the USA, and worked extensively in the United Arab

Still active: Maj Vincent Ward

Emirates and Saudi Arabia.

But, worn-out by six years of virtually non-stop commuting, he headed home and joined the Inland Revenue. The life of a taxman didn't appeal for long and Vincent moved on quickly, becoming regimental secretary of the RADC in 1984, a post he held until his 66th birthday in 1993.

Even then he wouldn't entertain thoughts of permanent retirement so he stayed on part-time as an RADC trustee, archivist and assistant editor of the Aldershot Garrison Herald.

After such an active life, what advice can he give to a job-seeker about to leave the Army?

"Do what you can within your own capacity and confidence... and take advice from your local education and resettlement centre."

He says working with 77 Army Education Centre in Aldershot while editing the Herald has opened his eyes to "the vast organisation" dedicated to furthering your career in and out of the Service.

And his recipe for keeping some serious leisure activity: look in the yachting press for advertisements seeking crews to make delivery voyages, then make use of the experience to gain sailing qualifications.

Of tanks and cornflakes

The owner of this familiar face on TV, film and in the theatre served with the Royal Tank Regiment and was put off gin for ever

Interview: Ray Routledge
Picture: Graeme Main

"I THINK the Army for me was character-building," announced actor and writer George Baker from the comfort of an armchair in his Wiltshire home.

Now synonymous with Chief Inspector Reg Wexford, the character he portrayed in TV's long-running Ruth Rendell Mysteries, he has played hundreds of roles over the years.

Born in Bulgaria, the son of Capt Francis Baker, British honorary vice-consul in Varna and formerly of the West Riding Regiment and Intelligence Corps, George wanted to act from an early age. So a call-up for National Service was the last thing he needed at the start of his career.

Nevertheless, he reckons it did him some good.

"I had a funny childhood and the Army gave me stability," he said. "Although I say it myself I wasn't a bad soldier. I had some wonderful experiences and learned a great deal."

Selected for officer training, he joined the 3rd Royal Tank Regiment, then stationed in Hong Kong. "I knew I couldn't afford to join a cavalry regiment because they required a private income and I didn't have one. But you could live on your pay in the Royal Tank Regiment."

The only National Service officer serving with 3 RTR, George had always been a keen rider and soon found himself saddled with the job of equitation officer.

He tells the story of two brother officers who didn't listen to his advice, to their painful cost. "It was decided to start a saddle club at our base at Sekong and so we bought six Australian horses. We went to Kowloon to get them and were told they were saddle-broken."

"Back in Sekong the next day, and after being thrown several times, it was obvious to me the horses had never been ridden. It was like a rodeo."

"Two of the more senior officers decided they would go for a ride, although I warned them the horses were skittish. But they gave me a snivelling look and told me they knew exactly what they were doing. It wasn't long before they both walked home."

His time in the Far East ended in a whimper: he contracted sprue, a tropical disease with chronic enteritis symptoms. "It was a bit like dysentery's older brother," was how George described it.

After weeks in hospital he was sent home and told he was a "P7" (he had a disability) but not bad enough for a "P8"

(qualified for a pension). He saw out the remainder of his National Service on the Castle Martin ranges in Pembrokeshire, although the Army was not quite finished with him.

"I was in the reserves for four years with the 3rd/4th County of London Yeomanry and did my training camps and things," he recalled. While he was on a camp at Bovington the film The Ship That Died of Shame, in which he starred alongside Richard Attenborough, had its premiere in London. Returning to Dorset from the event, George had rather a lot to drink at a party in the sergeants' mess.

"Next day my head was rattling and a Sgt Birmingham insisted I get into the tank turret. This gun was going off and I have never drunk gin from that day to this."

George reckons his Army bearing was a great help in several war films in which he appeared. "I was in The Dam Busters and A Hill in Korea with Stanley Baker. Michael Caine spoke his first line, which I wrote for him, in that."

Television and film work kept him busy. He appeared in the first Armchair Theatre production, a major television event in 1956, and in an amazing 96 one-off TV dramas in the series Play for Today, The Wednesday Play and Play of the Month.

George took the part of Tiberius in I Claudius, one of the greatest TV dramas series ever made. "It is now on DVD and "Several months later I was asked by Kellogg's to go to Manchester to present an award. I thought my scabs would be a funny story to tell but they didn't see it that way."

George began his association with Wexford in 1987, starring in 26 episodes of the Ruth Rendell Mysteries until the run ended in 2000.

In more than 50 years in the business he has worked with some of the greatest actors and directors.

"One of the most memorable was Dame Peggy Ashcroft. She was an extraordinary actress and had a quality. Peggy was vibrant, passionate and became the person she was playing. You went along with it."

Of the directors, one of the most influential was one he never worked with. "I did a screen test for Moby Dick. I walked onto the set and John Huston just sat there and told me to do what I wanted to."

"After a while he got up and said why don't I do it another way, and he showed me. So I did. I didn't get the part but he gave me a copy of the test and I showed it to Michael Balcon."

"That is how I got The Ship That Died of Shame. I didn't act as well as that again for about ten years. That was the power of a director who really knew what he was doing."

"It's the same with any good leader really. If you give someone the confidence then away they go. And it was exactly the same thing in the Army."

Not-so-reluctant soldier: George Baker says his Army bearing was a great help in films got older. I had to look 84 and it took 11 hours starting at 4.30am to get the make-up on."

Apparently the make-up people hadn't quite perfected the scabs required on his head, until chance intervened. "We were eating cornflakes and I put one on my head. It worked."

At-a-glance guide to key points of 2003 award

● AFPRB recommendations accepted in full, with no staging.

● Overall basic pay increased by 3.2 per cent for majority of Regular Army and Reserves.

● Greater increases for some – 3.7 per cent for privates and lance corporals in some pay ranges – and adjustments to some pay ranges.

● Single rate of pay of £11,122 for all new entrants.

● Previously excluded groups – veterinary officers, chaplains, Regular and Reserve officers commissioned from ranks – to be taken into Pay 2000 and to get a pay increase of 3.2 per cent.

● No change to X-factor of 13 per cent.

● Reduction in initial qualifying period for Longer Separated Service Allowance (LSSA) from 18 to 12 months; increase of 5 per cent in daily rate; and Accumulated Turbulence (AT) and Accumulated Turbulence Plus (AT+) bonuses increased from £1,000 to £1,250.

Single minded

AN update on MoD thinking on the differential treatment of married and single personnel and those in long-term relationships was provided to the AFPRB.

One of the aims of the Armed Forces Overarching Personnel Strategy was to review and possibly reduce differences and anomalies.

The first of two strands of MoD work in this area involved assembling information on the circumstances of personnel to improve understanding of criteria that might be used to define a partnership and to consider the financial implications of any change to entitlements.

The second was MoD's involvement in a wider, Cabinet Office-led study looking at the feasibility of giving legal status to defined partnerships.

MoD also told the AFPRB that current pension arrangements did not recognise unmarried partners, but that this was being examined in the ongoing review of the Armed Forces' Pension Scheme.

As a matter of policy the MoD was also seeking to reduce the differences in treatment of single and married personnel when introducing replacement allowances. Longer Separated Service Allowance (LSSA) was an example of this policy in action, as were improvements to the Get-You-Home package for single homeowners.

Open all hours

Working-time creeps up after encouraging dip

AN hours-of-work survey carried out by the MoD during 2001-2002 showed a "worrying change" to the recent downward trend within the Armed Forces, according to the independent Armed Forces Pay Review Body (AFPRB).

As reported in the last issue of Soldier (Update, Pages 8-9), the results were not unexpected given the turbulent international situation during that period and the many calls on the Services.

Undermanning in some specialist branches had compounded the impact on working hours.

The previous year had reflected an encouraging downward trend, indicating that the Services had made efforts to keep to the spirit of the regulations, said the AFPRB.

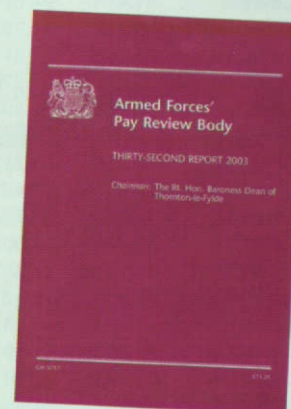

It reviews the position of junior ranks against the National Minimum Wage (NMW) using the results of the hours-of-work survey, which is regarded as an important part of the pay body's terms of reference to deliver broad pay comparability. On average, junior ranks worked 53.8 hours a week which, using NMW rates, would equate to a weekly salary of £225.96 for those aged 21 and over and £193.68 for under-21s.

This, noted the AFPRB, was still below the minimum weekly salary for privates (£241.22), although a significant rise in average working hours in 2001-02 brought the lowest-paid junior ranks much closer to the National Minimum Wage rate.

For this reason the AFPRB increased salaries for privates and lance corporals in some pay ranges by 3.7 per cent.

The surveys of working patterns sent to units are seen as a vital tool in maintaining awareness of how many hours soldiers actually work.

Impact on family life considered

SPOUSES and partners of Service personnel are included in the Armed Forces Pay Review Body's visits to Service establishments around the world.

So that its members can gain an insight to the impact of Service life on families and the consequences of retention, the AFPRB also seeks the views of the Army Families Federation, while the heads of the three Service families' organisations are involved in informal discussions.

"As in previous years," says the 2003 report, "accommodation and separation were major themes of our discussions, together with the ability of families to access public services such as health and education on an equal footing with civilians."

AFPRB members found that access to, and continuity of, employment was a recurring theme wherever they went, particularly among spouses and partners who had chosen accompanied service.

These problems were more pronounced for those in overseas postings.

It was partly in response to concerns expressed about the impact of Service life on personnel and their families that the AFPRB brought forward its review of the X-factor (which is to remain at 13 per cent) and of Longer Separated Service Allowance.

Home from home

DATA from continuous attitude studies indicated that two-thirds of Royal Navy, one-third of Army and half of Royal Air Force personnel own, but do not necessarily occupy, their home.

According to the AFPRB report, personnel recognise the benefits of buying into the housing market early in their career, both as an investment and to provide greater family stability.

Work is going on to examine the scope for harmonising Long Service Advance of Pay between the three Services as part of a wider study into assisted house purchase schemes, for example the buy-to-let project being piloted by the Army.

Separate pay tables are available for these groups and are published in the AFPRB report, or you can get a copy of the daily rates from your RAO.

key points

● From Page 43

● Increases, by up to 9 per cent, to rates of all Reserve bounties.

● Special measures to retain "professional aviators".

● All forms of specialist pay – including parachute pay, flying pay and diving pay – and all forms of non-specialist pay to increase by 3.2 per cent.

● Financial retention incentives for Royal Signals operators, technicians and selected supervisors on completion of their Class 3, Class 1 and supervisory courses. These will be £2,500, £5,000 and £10,000 respectively for a specified return-of-service period, corresponding to the training requirement for the relevant course.

● Previously-announced golden hellos of £50,000 to attract qualified doctors and dentists and significantly enhanced pay scales for serving consultants, doctors, dentists and senior medical officers.

● Service families accommodation (SFA) rent rises ranging from £1.19 a day (7 per cent) for larger, best-quality quarters to 2p a day (0.5 per cent) for smallest and worst.

● Garage rents up by 1p to 58p a day.

● Single living accommodation (SLA) charges up by from 13p a day (2.7 per cent) for Grade 1 (the best), lower increases for Grades 2 and 3 and no increase for Grade 4 (the worst).

● Water and sewerage charges for all SFA set at annual rates of between £223 and £252 (a rise of 4p a day) for SFA and £77 for SLA (no increase).

● No change to food charges, which remain at £2.47 a day for married unaccompanied personnel and £3.38 a day for single personnel.

Pay-As-You-Dine trials welcomed

THE AFPRB welcomed the start of trials last autumn of Pay-As-You-Dine (PAYD) at three locations and noted that its members had detected growing support for the system among all ranks.

Junior ranks, who generally support PAYD, believe quality and choice would be improved. There were more mixed views among senior NCOs and officers, some of whom fear that individuals may forgo meals when their money runs out or adopt an unhealthy diet with a resulting impact on efficiency.

Major concerns had been raised about the impact on the training and retention of Service chefs, who would continue to be required for operations.

If the trials are a success, PAYD will be rolled out across Great Britain in 2005.

En-trenched in the action: Jamie Bell, left, with Full Monty star Hugo Speer on the set of First World War supernatural chiller Deathwatch

Army's star recruit

Bell boy comes of age in the trenches

AN exceptional performance in Billy Elliot three years ago transported Jamie Bell from his mother's modest home in Billingham in the North East of England to the glitz and glamour of the Golden Globe and Oscar ceremonies in America.

But despite escorting Nicole Kidman to last year's Bafta awards and having forged a friendship with Gladiator star Russell Crowe, Jamie is acutely aware that there is more to being an actor than just photo-calls and champagne receptions.

The 16-year-old star had his eyes opened to a far less glamorous side of the acting profession during the filming of First World War supernatural chiller Deathwatch, in which he plays Pte Charlie Shakespeare, a young recruit exposed to the horror and degradation of trench warfare.

Set in 1917 on the Western Front, the movie, which hit cinema screens late last year, was filmed on location in and around reconstructed trench systems near Prague, in conditions far removed from those Jamie will have luxuriated in at the Oscars.

"We regularly filmed in temperatures of minus 12," he explained. "On the set there was a big truck with a tanker on the back containing 60,000 litres of water and we had that poured on us each day, and the mud in the trenches was awful.

"Another actor asked me what was worse, doing a dance sequence 13 times or being in the mud? I told him being in the mud. It was relentless. One day I was stood in a field at five o'clock in the morning and could not breathe through my nose because I was completely covered. It was so bad that even the crew and their equipment were getting stuck in the mud.

"It rained almost non-stop during filming so we were standing in water most of the time and that is the film's best quality – it looks right, it looks grimy.

"However, being in the trench everyday with fake bodies lying everywhere was hard – for some of the actors it was too much and people were falling ill. During the real war it must have been hell."

As well as having to cope with a daily mudbath and adverse weather, the cast of Deathwatch, which also features

Hugo Speer (The Full Monty) and Andy Serkis (The Lord of the Rings), had to share their trench with more than 1,000 rodents.

"The rats were released before we started filming," said Jamie. "They were everywhere and there is one scene in the film in which one character has his legs bitten off by the rats. The actor hated them, but I thought they were cute and they did not bother me."

Despite the discomfort of his short spell in Army uniform, Jamie has no regrets about becoming involved in the project and hopes that his experience in the trenches will transform his career.

"I wanted to find a script which would help me to lose the label of the Billy Elliot kid," he said. "Most of the roles I was offered before Deathwatch were still child roles and I was worried that if I accepted one of them I would be typecast as a child actor and that my career would be over and dead at 18.

"I needed a script which would propel me to adulthood and Deathwatch offered me the chance to do that."

‘For some of the actors it was too much, during the real war it must have been hell’

THE MILITARY MUSEUM OF DEVON & DORSET

Come with us on a world tour...

A modern military museum which uses touch screen computers and creative displays to tell the stories of courage, humour, tradition and sacrifice of those who served in the regiments of Devon and Dorset for over 300 years. The uniforms, weapons and medals all bear silent witness to those of a bygone age and of more recent conflicts. The diversity of articles on display allows the imagination to recreate the world of these soldiers and their families from 1685 to the present day. An added bonus is the spectacular view from the battlements of Dorchester and surrounding countryside brought to life in the novels of Thomas Hardy.

Last out: The final batch of National Servicemen leave their barracks for civvy street in 1963

Remember the call-up?

THEY might, in many cases, have been reluctant heroes but National Service left an indelible mark on generations of young British males.

Less strange to a post-war population than it might now appear, two years of compulsory military duty was even then a huge wrench for callow youths, many of whom had never before spent a night away from home.

They might have whinged about their lot, but the Army gave them a discipline, pride and independence that served the country well. The last of them shed his uniform 40 years ago next month, an anniversary to be recalled in a special exhibition to be mounted at the National Army Museum in Chelsea.

It opens on May 16, followed by a weekend of special events on the 17th and 18th when visitors will have the chance to meet National Service veterans.

Curator Keith Miller said the call-up, from 1948 to 1963, had affected a whole generation of reluctant civilians. "Their experiences and the conflicts they took part in are not generally well known, in marked contrast to those of the previous generation who fought in the Second World War," he said.

"This exhibition aims not only to explore the conflicts in which National Servicemen were involved, but also to capture some of the very different experiences of National Service, from the viewpoint of the young men who were there."

Among the artefacts and equipment of the time on display will be the hated No 3 green blanco, basic kit, weapons, contemporary film footage, music and recordings of veterans recounting their experiences, and interactive displays.

There will be sections dedicated to the three key battle-grounds of the period, Korea, Malaya and the Middle East.

The last man to complete his National Service was Lt Richard Vaughan, who hung up his uniform on May 16, 1963.

● 730 days until demob: National Service 1948-63 opens on May 16 at the National Army Museum, Royal Hospital Road, Chelsea, London SW3 4HT (tel 020 7730 0717) and will run for at least a year. Admission is free.

Military goes back to school to learn how to break down cultural barriers

Report: Nigel Kendall
Pictures: Steve Dock

NESTLING in the Buckinghamshire countryside, Wilton Park, home of the Defence School of Languages (DSL), is a peaceful setting for one of the British military's key training initiatives.

The school provides language training to enable our Armed Forces to operate effectively overseas – giving it a certain topical significance. Equally vital, however, its English Language Wing aims its courses at their counterparts from the Commonwealth and other overseas countries.

As part of "military diplomacy", this faculty helps build relationships with, and between, military personnel from around the world.

The basic aim of DSL's teaching philosophy is to enable its students to communicate effectively about military matters, using the specific language being taught. Much of the course vocabulary is both technical and specific to the Armed Services.

Three of the Joint Service school's five wings train British personnel – one in Arabic, another in Slavonic languages (Russian, Croatian, Serbian and Bosnian) and a third in Western European languages (French, Spanish and Italian).

A fourth teaches English as a foreign language to overseas students, while the HQ Wing provides general training and admin support.

The quality of DSL's tuition is not in question. In 2000, a Nuffield language report identified Foreign Office and military language training in the UK as being "the best", and easily comparable with other countries.

Lt Col Sophia Ahern, the DSL's commanding officer, said: "The training we give is totally intensive, because from the minute they get in at 0830 to the minute they leave at 1630 they are learning the language. And when they go home at night, they have their vocabulary cards to learn.

"The training we provide is second to none. At university you might be able to do a combined degree in, say, French and German, but there's no way you can intensively study an individual language.

"A soldier can attend a Spanish course, for example, and if successful is then eligible to go on to achieve a Masters Degree in International Communications from the University of Westminster.

"All our soldiers have to do is produce a written report and prepare a presentation in their own language – not even in the

Your Majesty,

We write to express our thanks to your Majesty, as Commander in Chief of the British Army. We are students from the Ukrainian Armed Forces.

We are doing a 12-week British Military English Course at the English Language Wing in the Defence School of Languages at Beaconsfield. It is really the best opportunity to improve our English.

We were hugely impressed by what we have heard and seen. We would like to assure you that the significance of this impression will never be lost. We are so excited.

We are still brimming with enthusiasm from our British experience – a gratifying reflection of the quality and proficiency of the teachers, and also the professionalism and administration at the Defence School of Languages. We have been made so welcome in your country since our arrival here at the beginning of September.

Thank you very much, again.

Yours sincerely learned language. So it's great for them to be able to get that sort of qualification out of an Army training course."

As far as foreign military groups are concerned, all the bids for English language training are filtered through the International Defence Training Agency (IDTA).

"They send us our students. We don't have a say on who we do or don't accept. We train everyone they send us. The DSL is on the internet, and our defence attachés go armed with the defence training manuals and offer the training to national defence forces."

Half those attending courses at Wilton Park are overseas students learning English. They are taught the language at all levels from elementary to advanced, as well as in the context of specialised mili-

"They have a great time. They go to the theatre, the House of Commons and to Oxford. We are very well located for them to travel tary topics such as peacekeeping, combined operations and intelligence.

Facilities at DSL are superb, with the latest multimedia teaching technology and access to a range of on-line information. A students' self-access centre is linked to the internet and there is a language laboratory, video rooms with satellite TV, and a wide range of learning materials to suit individual needs. The class sizes are small and teaching is carried out in spacious surroundings.

Students also learn about Britain's social structure and its culture. Lt Cdr Sally Prendergast RN, officer commanding the English Language Wing, said:

at weekends. And they enjoy it."

When Soldier visited her wing – where she insists English is spoken at all times – social integration was plain to see. In the mess a Turkish naval captain drank coffee with a Chinese Army officer, while members of the Czech military chatted with their Latvian counterparts.

"One of the most important objectives of this course is to improve brotherhood and friendship among the participants," commented Cdr Can Uzunsoy of the Turkish Navy.

"Turkish officers, for example, rarely get together here because they have all made friends from different countries."

Lt Cdr Prendergast said: "We have occasional little tantrums from foreign students about their English ability.

"However, there is an awful lot achieved here. We have some specialist English teachers, but the vast majority are either retired or serving military in one capacity or another. There is a huge amount of corporate knowledge."

It is gratifying when foreign military attachés tell the school that students leave Beaconsfield feeling extremely well disposed towards the Defence Language School and the British military.

This may be explained partly by social events organised by staff to help visitors relax and taste British culture.

"They might come into the mess in the evening and find we are doing something unexpected like Scottish country dancing," said Lt Cdr Prendergast. "And then, because they've had a great time, they will want to come to the Burns Night."

Exercising the faculties

SITUATED on the outskirts of Beaconsfield, Wilton Park accommodates up to 430 on a secure site which includes three messes, two social clubs, a gymnasium, tennis and squash courts and extensive playing fields.

The Joint Service school has a military staff of 26, including 17 officers who teach, as well as six junior and senior NCOs and three warrant officers.

The twice-yearly, 12-week British Military English Course for up to 48 foreign students a time is designed for middle- to senior-ranking officers and other personnel from all branches of the Armed Forces and Civil Service.

It aims to:

- Help students improve their English.
- Introduce students to British culture and history.
- Provide students with an insight into the organisation and workings of the British Armed Forces.

Students are encouraged to decide for themselves which areas and topics to focus on during their stay.

Man with the golden gun

Former gunner aims to revive fortunes of British biathlon team

Picture: Graeme Main

BRITISH biathlon's newly-appointed shooting coach Roger Roberts is accustomed to being part of a winning team, writes Andy Simms.

As manager of the Welsh smallbore shooting squad, Roberts, who served with 19 Field Regiment, Royal Artillery before leaving the Army in 1982, watched with delight as two of his protégés won Wales's first gold of the 2002 Commonwealth Games at the National Shooting Centre, Bisley last summer.

Ceri Dallimore and Johanne Brekke shot a Commonwealth record of 1,175 points in the women's 50m rifle prone pairs and the British Biathlon Union (BBU) are now hoping that Roberts can apply the same Midas touch to the fortunes of their World and Europa Cup squads.

"I first became involved in biathlon by complete chance," explained Roberts, who has himself been a member of the Welsh smallbore squad for the last ten years. "I got talking to someone from the BBU last summer when I went looking for a pair of roller skis, and the next thing I knew I was asked to take a look at the technique of a couple of Great Britain's shooters."

It was a request that led to the 60-year-old meeting and working full-time alongside a number of Army biathletes, including Olympians Cpl Mark Gee (2 RTR) and Cpl Jason Sklenar (28 Engr Regt).

"A lot of the guys involved in biathlon in the United Kingdom are servicemen and being ex-military myself I found that I had an immediate rapport with them - I understand them and enjoy their company," he said. "So for me this coaching job is just like being back in the Army."

"I also found it fairly easy to transfer my skills from one sport to the other. There are obviously a lot of similarities between the two disciplines, with the only real difference being a timing issue."

"Smallbore shooting is more to do with precision than time, whereas biathletes need to hit their targets and move on as quickly as possible."

And despite only being seven months into his tenure as coach, Roberts has wasted no time in applying his expertise to the British biathlon set-up.

"I would like to think that my presence is having a positive impact on the team, and the one thing that I hope I have already addressed is the squad's attitude towards shooting," he told Soldier. "It is a sport that is largely mental, it requires no muscle whatsoever and the leading nations in biathlon are already wise to that fact."

"For example, in Norway the top competitors have a psychological coach in addition to their skiing and shooting trainers.

"So the main thing I have been encouraging the British team to do in training is to shoot quickly, to disregard whether they are hitting the target or not, and just settle into a rhythm."

"That way, when it comes to competitions they will maintain that rhythm and hit the targets without dwelling unnecessarily on the task at hand."

"The problem comes, in any sport, when the athlete starts thinking about what they are going to do - that can make the brain work a little too hard instead of just acting naturally and firing on instinct. After all there is no point worrying about missed targets as there is nothing you can do about them."

Roberts believes that with his new training methods and the talents of young guns LCpl Lee Jackson (1 GH), LBdr Lance Hodgkins (40 Regt RA), Cpl Marc Walker (1 GS Regt RLC), LCpl Emma Fowler (1 GS Regt RLC) and Cpl Tom Clemens (1 D and D), Great Britain can climb the international rankings table to unprecedented heights, and he intends to be around to share in that success.

"Age might not be on my side, but I've said that as long as I am fit enough to pass on my skills then I will continue to do so - both for the Welsh smallbore shooting squad and the British biathlon team," he said. "I love shooting and do not intend to hang up my rifle until my eyes give up on me."

'I love shooting and do not intend to hang up my rifle until my eyes give up on me'

Army ref plays his cards right

Army official rewarded by the world's governing body for football

Pictures: Graeme Main

BY his own admission WO2 Darren Adie (2 R Anglian) was a woeful centre forward, scoring as infrequently for his battalion as Diego Forlan has for Manchester United, writes Andy Simms.

But despite the absence of a predatory touch, the 36-year-old is still not ruling out the chance of appearing at a World Cup after becoming the British Army's first FIFA (Federation Internationale de Football) accredited match official.

Darren, who is currently working for the Defence Procurement Agency at Abbeywood, was invited by FIFA to apply for an international assistant referee's badge late last year after a series of flawless performances running the line in the Welsh Premier League.

"I had to maintain assessment marks high enough to keep me among the top eight assistant referees in Wales," he explained. "The assessments included fitness tests and a medical, and when I was eventually told I had made the cut I was delighted."

"There are only 18 assistant referees with FIFA badges in the whole of England and Wales, and it really is a great honour to be among such a select few."

It is a badge that has already enabled Darren to rub shoulders with some of footballing's elite. The Army official made his international debut as an assistant referee in a friendly between Wales U20 and Republic of Korea U20 at Cardiff Arms Park and was the fourth official at the Millennium Stadium when Mark Hughes's Welsh side drew 2-2 with Bosnia Herzegovina – fixtures far removed from the Sunday league matches he officiated just over seven years ago.

"Considering I completed my basic course with the Army only in 1996, I suppose it has been something of a rapid rise through the ranks," he conceded. "I love football and having stopped playing at 30 I saw refereeing as a way of staying involved in the game – and as a referee you can carry on until your legs give way."

"At first I pursued it as a way of learning the laws of the game and to keep myself fit, but it soon became a bug that I just could not get enough of."

International peacekeeper: WO2 Darren Adie

An Englishman born and bred, Darren originally registered with the English FA, but a quirk of fate – the Newport post-code of his Chepstow home – meant his services were snapped up by the Welsh FA instead.

"It was definitely a case of being in the right place at the right time because it would have taken me much longer to reach the top flight in England – there are more steps to the premier league than in Wales," he told Soldier. "In comparison I moved through the Welsh leagues quickly and to get on to the FIFA list at 36 is fantastic."

'Players aspire to be internationals so why shouldn't referees?'

to be internationals so why shouldn't referees?"

And if Darren continues to play his cards right his FIFA accreditation could provide a passport to football's showcase competitions: the Champions League, European Championships and World Cup finals.

"My immediate aim is to just stay on the list, get some more experience in competitions like the Inter-Toto and UEFA Cup and enjoy the football," he said. "However, I am more than aware that the European Championships take place in Portugal next summer and that two years later it is World Cup time again. There is no reason, if I continue to get the necessary marks, that I can't be on the list until I am 45, so the chances are that I will get the opportunity to be part of a big tournament."

With extensive travel opportunities and a chance to watch first-class players parade their skills at close quarters, the life of an international referee sounds like the perfect profession for an ardent soccer supporter, but Darren is quick to highlight that the job is not without its flaws. Contending with baying crowds and abusive players has become part and parcel of a referee's lot.

"People seem to forget that officials would rather see a game decided by the two teams and not any decision they make," he said. "It is our job to ensure that fair play is administered, but not everybody sees it that way and you have to be thick-skinned."

'If nothing else, being a referee gets you out of shopping with the wife on a Saturday afternoon'

"If I get heckled by a crowd when I am out in the middle or running the line it does not bother me at all. They have paid their money and are entitled to their opinion, but it is hard to accept when a player gives you an earful. "The worst thing a player can do is call you a cheat or question your impartiality," he said. "Officials can only give an honest decision on what they see at that time. It is easy to make the right decision every time when you can analyse an incident from every possible angle on a slow-motion replay, but referees do not have that luxury and only get a split-second and one chance to get it right."

"To be verbally abused for doing your best is not acceptable. Referees are not in the game for the money, but simply because they love football and many officials are now hanging up their boots because of the continuous barrage of abuse you can get from some players."

"So why do I put up with it? Because if nothing else, being a referee gets you out of shopping with the wife on a Saturday afternoon."

Win tickets to top equestrian show

A FIRM favourite with both competitors and spectators, the Royal Windsor Horse Show heralds the official start of Britain's outdoor show season and has become the Henley of the horse world.

In 2002, the show staged the first of the Golden Jubilee Celebrations, and this year's event, which will be held in Windsor on May 14-18, will bring together the largest ever number of showing classes at a single venue. Celebrating its 60th birthday, the show will also include a daily tribute to the vital role played by horses in the Second World War.

The organisers of the Royal Windsor Horse Show are pleased to be able to offer Soldier readers a 15 per cent discount on tickets for Wednesday, May 14. To take advantage of this exclusive discount ring the box office on 0870 1215370 and quote Soldier. Please note that this discount is applicable only for advance bookings, that all tickets are subject to availability and that a 50p booking fee will be charged per order. The offer closes on May 9.

Advanced tickets usually range in price from £10-£12 for adults and £7-8 for concessions, with on-the-day prices from £12 to £14 for adults and £7-£9 for concessions.

◆ Soldier has five pairs of tickets for the Royal Windsor Horse Show on May 14 to give away. For your chance to win, simply answer the following question:

In which year was the first Royal Windsor Horse Show held?

Send your answers on a postcard to Royal Windsor Show competition, Soldier, Ordnance Road, Aldershot, Hants GU11 2DU.

The winners will be drawn at random from the correct answers received by April 30. Usual rules apply.

Game on at Twickenham

THE Army-Royal Navy rugby match for the Babcock Trophy is definitely on at Twickenham on May 3, writes Roger Thompson.

On that day those whose business is warfare will close with the opposition as though their everlasting souls depend on the outcome. The 40,000 red and blue partisans will again raise the roof at Twickenham.

A few Service players have deployed to the Gulf. Despite the absences, both the Army and Navy are preparing intensely for a match that is finding its true position just behind the professional Zurich League.

"The Combined Services beat the Barbarians in November and both teams will have plenty of top players available for the crunch match of the year," said Lt Col Andy Hickling, the Army coach.

"It is down to team preparation, game plans and individual nerve."

The Navy are travelling to Ireland to prepare for the season's grand finale. Despite going down 18-13 in last year's encounter, they scored the game's only try, in which England international Marine Spencer Brown played a major part. Countering his elusive running will again be a major factor in the Army's game plan.

The Army is building up at training camps in Australia and New Zealand. Coach Andy Hickling is upbeat and focusing on the strengths of the players available. Around the newcomers, old hands Howard Graham and Mal Roberts will provide a firm base for the attacking flair of a lively Fijian contingent. The final match, against Blue Thunder Queensland, will be a crucial test of genesis.

Those who follow the Army-Navy game will know that the battle is won up front. Fortunately, the Army can call on Scotland's Mattie Stewart (PWRR) and England A prop Chris Budgen (RWF) for the front row. Front-row play may be a black art for those who insist on watching the ball, but battle flags are hauled up and may be lowered at the very point where Red meets Blue.

The Daily Telegraph described the Army-Royal Navy match as "a glorious anachronism that gets bigger by the year". With so many corps and clubs holding their annual reunions at Twickenham, the Reds and Blues will not lack support.

When the whistle blows it will be game on - the winner takes all.

Don't miss it.

Three out of four ain't bad

Army's cross-country 'Wembley' is scene of triumph in the rain

THE Army won three of the four titles on offer at the Naafi-sponsored Inter-Services cross-country championships run over a rain-swept Tweseldown racecourse, writes Maj Steve Lonnen.

Given current events, it was remarkable the meeting went ahead, and despite the absence of a few established names it turned out to be as competitive as ever.

Pte Michael Sanchez (17), Gibraltar Regiment, made light of the conditions to lead the Army to victory in the under-20 junior men's race. His team mates took five of the next six places. Sanchez, who was a superb 18th in the Army finals, has a bright future in the sport. Sig Laycock and Spr Kempster were second and third.

With three RAF and three Royal Navy veteran men (over-40) boasting 33-min 10km form, it was difficult to see how the Army could break the stranglehold of the other Services. Former national veterans' 10km champion and GB orienteerer Maj John Rye RM (47) retained the title, although strong finishing by the RAF secured the title by 11 points from the Navy.

Former Welsh international WO2 Taff Thomas (R Sigs) was first in for the Army in 19th place.

In the women's race, Lt Jo Kelsey's second place in the English nationals six days before gave her an air of invincibility on the start line. The "Black and Reds" filled the first six places to confirm the resurgence of cross-country in the Army.

Celebrating her debut call-up for England in Milan, Kelsey won in 16min 51sec. Runner-up Capt Sara Rollins, better known as a GB orienteerer, sneaked the silver medal ahead of GB triathlete Sgt Lisa Yates (APTC).

Inter-Services 1500m champion Cpl Sarah Patterson (AGC) finished fourth, with teenager Sig Becky Harvey and LCpl Briony Thwaite in the next two places to achieve maximum points for the women.

The eagerly-awaited senior race didn't disappoint. Withdrawals by two Army runners, including champion LCpl Phil Hinch, led to the drafting in of SSgt Colin Palmer and OCdt Aiden Whitwam. At the 11th hour Cpl Kevin Sheppard (RLC) and Sig Haggi Chepkowny, both struggling with leg injuries, declared themselves fit.

With the RAF at almost full strength and delighted not to be returning to the rugged Deepcut course, 23 of the Services' finest set off into the worst of the day's weather. Apart from a brief challenge from Chepkowny, Sheppard was never under threat.

The Army's 11-point lead over the RAF at halfway was cut to five with three miles to go when Cpl Dave Branfoot (AGC) limped out with a calf strain.

The RAF ran out of their skins on the final lap, but Army team captain WO2 Craig McBurney overhauled six runners in the final two miles to claim the vital sixth scoring slot.

At the head of the field, Sheppard was chased home by Chepkowny, who had effectively run the last mile on one leg having re-opened a crippling injury.

The RAF's Whitehouse was third with former junior international Capt Tim Crossland (RLC) fourth. Whitfield (RAF), Dashper (RN) and Lewis (RAF) finished ahead of a jubilant Cpl John "JJ" Smith (R Sigs), himself running the race of his life in front of Cpl Kevin Conlon (R Sigs), his flu-ridden training partner.

Livesey, Simon and Barton filled the next three places for the RAF and in doing so had all six counters in against the Army's four. SSgt Palmer was chased all the way to the finish line by McBurney for 13th and 14th respectively and so achieved a victory for the Army by just five points.

Whitwam, a 30min 02sec 10km performer prior to Sandhurst training, finished ahead of RAF and RN non-scorers.

In spite of the weather, Tweseldown, the Wembley of Army running, drew plaudits from all three Services. Thanks go to Maj Jim Wood (APTC) for the course design.

Win: Cpl Kevin Sheppard

How observant are you?

WIN £100!

Frank Finch has made ten changes in detail to one of his drawings taken from our archive. Circle the differences in the lower image, cut out the whole panel, add your name and address and send to HOAY 737, Soldier, Ordnance Road, Aldershot, GU11 2DU by April 30.

A photocopy is acceptable, but only one entry per person may be submitted.

Do not include anything else in your envelope.

First correct entry drawn after the closing date will win £100; the second and third will receive £10 gift vouchers. No correspondence of any kind can be entered into.

The names of the winner and runners-up will be announced in the June issue.

Name : (Give initials and rank or title)

Address :

February issue (No 735): First correct entry drawn at random was from Pte William Suthon, of Telford, Salop, who wins £100. Runners-up Mr Albert Watts, of Marlborough, Wilts and Mr A G Croucher, of Winchester, Hants, each win a £10 gift voucher. The ten differences were: assistant's hat; finger under plate; soldier's cuff, sleeve, belt and combat markings; chef's hat, hair, tunic bow and griddle.

Freeze frame

"Capt Smythe decided to save time and hold a javelin practice at the same time as rifle drill"

Write a caption for the photograph, right, first published in Soldier in August 1952. The best, in the Editor's opinion, will win a prize from our silver logo collection. Usual rules apply, entries to reach us by April 30.

OUR prize for the February competition, left, goes to Cpl A Muirhead of 1 LI LAD REME, for his offbeat suggestion: "In the absence of the real thing, Sgt Ken dispatches a Goddess to Barbie's apartment".

We also liked "The sergeant didn't like the look of his new pacemaker" from SSgt G McLorie, Med Branch, HQ 5 Div; and "Just how long did you leave the CO's car in the car wash?" from Graham Drew, LSA Wing, Army School of Ammunition; and "Sarge, I don't think the CO is going to be impressed with his new staff car" from Sgt E S Edwards, PAIT, Bicester.

Many others on a topical theme included: "Like Formula 1, driver training has gone back 20 years in the Army", from Cpl Harrison REME, 7 Flight AAC; and "Great little mover on the gym floor, but the MoD better modify it for sand" from B Gaze of Cowes, Isle of Wight.

Sgt R G Owen, RTMC Chilwell, and LCpl P McGee, 35 Engr Regt, both came up with variations on "With a bit of fine tuning we could have a chance in this year's Robot Wars".

Picture: Rob Pollard

FLANKED by a bearer party of six drawn from 7 Signal Regiment, the ARRC Support Battalion and the Rheindahlen Support Unit, the remains of a Second World War soldier are laid to rest in the Reichswald Commonwealth War Graves Commission cemetery in Germany, writes Alan Patterson.

Sixty years after the unnamed Serviceman was killed, the bearer party carried his Union Flag-draped coffin across the immaculate lawn of the cemetery to an empty plot among the graves of fellow combatants.

During a service conducted by Padre Paul Wright of 16 Signal Regiment and St Boniface Church, JHQ Rheindahlen, a bugler sounded Last Post and Col David Hargreaves, Deputy Commander of 1 Signal Brigade and representing the GOC United Kingdom Support Command (Germany), saluted in tribute.

The ceremony closed a sequence of events which began on September 28, 1998 when a workman extending a car park near the village of Riesenbeck-Birgite, north of Münster, noticed human remains. Ikarus, a voluntary group which specialises in searching for missing war dead, combed the area and found evidence that the site had been used as a temporary burial ground for troops killed in a hard-fought battle at nearby Teutoburger Wald in April 1945. The Ikarus searchers identified 16 graves, laid out in a parallel rows, as well as a skeleton lying at an angle and partly under one of the temporary graves.

Beside it were 31 rounds of .303 ammunition, manufactured in 1944. The Ikarus people, who were represented at the burial, concluded that the soldier's body had been hidden by debris thrown up by the shell that killed him.

Although his name is not known, it is believed he was serving with either the 2 Devonshires or 3 Monmouthshires, two units heavily involved in the fighting at Teutoburger Wald against fanatical officer cadets and instructors from the Hitler Youth Cadet School at Hanover.

ASSISTANCE TO AUTHORS

The author of a book on HMS Fearless is keen to hear from anyone, military or civilian, who embarked in her. Also anyone who was rescued or aided by the crew of Fearless or who may have been a member of a James Bond movie film crew on the ship. The author requires good and bad memories, views and impressions from all levels, corps and regiments. Documents, photos and charts will be returned and any that are published will be fully credited. FLANKED by a bearer party of six drawn from 7 Signal Regiment, the ARRC Support Battalion and the Rheindahlen Support Unit, the remains of a Second World War soldier are laid to rest in the Reichswald Commonwealth War Graves Commission cemetery in Germany, writes Alan Patterson.

Sixty years after the unnamed Serviceman was killed, the bearer party carried his Union Flag-draped coffin across the immaculate lawn of the cemetery to an empty plot among the graves of fellow combatants.

During a service conducted by Padre Paul Wright of 16 Signal Regiment and St Boniface Church, JHQ Rheindahlen, a bugler sounded Last Post and Col David Hargreaves, Deputy Commander of 1 Signal Brigade and representing the GOC United Kingdom Support Command (Germany), saluted in tribute.

The ceremony closed a sequence of events which began on September 28, 1998 when a workman extending a car park near the village of Riesenbeck-Birgite, north of Münster, noticed human remains. Ikarus, a voluntary group which specialises in searching for missing war dead, combed the area and found evidence that the site had been used as a temporary burial ground for troops killed in a hard-fought battle at nearby Teutoburger Wald in April 1945. The Ikarus searchers identified 16 graves, laid out in a parallel rows, as well as a skeleton lying at an angle and partly under one of the temporary graves.

Beside it were 31 rounds of .303 ammunition, manufactured in 1944. The Ikarus people, who were represented at the burial, concluded that the soldier's body had been hidden by debris thrown up by the shell that killed him.

Although his name is not known, it is believed he was serving with either the 2 Devonshires or 3 Monmouthshires, two units heavily involved in the fighting at Teutoburger Wald against fanatical officer cadets and instructors from the Hitler Youth Cadet School at Hanover.

ASSISTANCE TO AUTHORS

* A double whammy for ARMY magazine, which is aimed at 13- to 16-year-olds. It was judged magazine of the year in the Association of Publishing Agencies' (APA) Customer Magazine Awards for 2002. Produced by Haymarket Customer Publishing for the Army Recruiting Group, Army was also judged customer mag of the year in the 2002 Periodical Publishers Association (PPA) awards. "As a recruitment tool Army is as original as it is effective," said the APA judges. "It has served its client well and opens up a whole new sector of customer publishing – for which it is the deserved and outright winner."

* Army recruiters in Bath have received a certificate of appreciation from Burton on Trent branch of the Royal British Legion. Sgt Maj Steve Lane and Sgt Mark Col-lacott lent them their recruiting van when branch officers were unable to find a suitable base for their Poppy Appeal collectors last November. Thanks to the high profile of the van in the town centre, £9,500 was collected – £1,500 up on 2001.

* In recognition of his 28 years of service to the Army Cadet Force, Maj Mark Knight has received a certificate of good service from Lt Gen John Kiszely, Inspector General Territorial Army. Mark is commander of No 1 Company, Cambridgeshire ACF, which has nine detachments covering Wis-bech to Peterborough.

WO2 Keith Williams, lately an estate manager at Fallingbowl Station and now posted to Episkopi in Cyprus, has received a GOC 1 (UK) Armoured Division commendation for exceptional and valuable service to charity while with the division.

TRENCH art – that's arty stuff made from the detritus of war – is to be the focus of this year's summer exhibition at Freemasons' Hall in Great Queen Street, London WC2B 5AZ. It will run from June 30 to September 19 and feature pieces such as battlefield souvenirs kept on mantle-pieces, engraved shellcases and letter-openers made from shrapnel. The exhibition includes items dating from the 16th century.

Conduct becoming

A CLASP to the Long Service and Good Conduct Medal is seldom awarded, not least because it denotes 30 years of irreproachable conduct. Which is what made the presentation of a clasp to Lt Col Richard Horner RA, right, rather special.

To qualify, an officer or soldier must complete a further 15 years' service after receiving the initial LS and GC Medal, of which seven years must have been spent in the ranks.

Richard, who is the Army representative at HQ Naafi, was presented with his clasp by Brig Stephen Andrews, Director of Personal Services (Army) at Upavon.

Suits you, sir

Shenkin adds pile to carpet

CONTROVERSY at the Welsh Assembly when Shenkin, the goat mascot of The Royal Regiment of Wales, was kicked out of a drinks reception. According to Peterborough in the Daily Telegraph, catering staff said he was unhygienic.

An assembly spokesman said: "We were not told in advance that Shenkin was on the guest list and he made a mess on the carpet."

APPRENTICES and staff of ABRO Donnington are helping veterans of the Home Service Force to create a commemorative grove at the National Memorial Arboretum at Arlewas. They have manufactured a 2ft-high insignia out of solid brass. Mounted on slate, it will form the centrepiece in a grove of trees dedicated to all Home Service units.

Return of Baldrick

BALDRICK, aka actor and TV presenter Tony Robinson, put in an appearance for a 101 Logistic Brigade HQ and Signal Squadron (261) team photograph in Aldershot. As part of 101 Logistic Brigade, the squadron is proud to wear the Blackadder patch as its unit insignia.

The patch was inspired during the 1990 Gulf War by the then commander's daughter, who hoped her father, Brig Martin White, had a "cunning plan". Baldrick's catchphrase from the Blackadder series caught on and the title was adopted as the formation insignia.

Tony, who is pictured in his famous Baldrick rig with squadron OC Maj Matt Fensom, was presented with a pacestick by WO1 (RSM) Kevin Smith.

Sam and Anna bow out from Ballykelly Sandes Centre after very long fortnight

SAM, left, and Anna Irons, far right, were presented with a Ballykelly Station plaque to mark their retirement – finally – as managers of the Sandes Centre in

Shackleton Barracks. The couple came out of retirement last May to keep the centre going for two weeks, and ended up doing it for seven months. They worked tirelessly to keep the centre open for soldiers of 1 Green Howards and other 8 Infantry Brigade troops based at Ballykelly.

Helping the other half: Capt Jeff Jophcote, left, gives wife Helen, a WO2 (Yeoman of Signals), a hand with her bergen during the exercise phase of a nine-day Signal Brigade trade training camp at Cultybraggan in Perthshire.

Jeff and Helen are serving with 32 (Scottish) Signal Regiment (Volunteers). Nearly 60 personnel, including radio operators, systems engineer technicians and field electricians passed out with enhanced trade qualifications.

This is my life

Kate Adie enthralled an evening audience of 500 in Edinburgh with a one-off talk on her career as a war correspondent. Kate, left, who was helping to raise funds for the Gurkha Welfare Trust, is pictured with Rfn Jadbhadur Pun, who is attached to the 1st Battalion, The Highlanders and who helped promote the event.

Event coordinator Neil Griffiths said: "Kate has visited Nepal and told us how one Gurkha saved her life in Kosovo."

A HERITAGE Lottery Fund grant of £87,000 will enable five military museums in the East Midlands to make their archive and photographic collections more accessible to the public.

The famous five are the Queen's Royal Lancers in Belvoir Castle, Leicestershire; Sherwood Foresters in Nottingham; Royal Leicesters in Leicester; Northamptonshires in Northampton; and the Royal Lincolnshires in Lincoln.

Calling all Cormorants

THE Joint Services Command and Staff College boasts a thriving alumni association known as the Cormorant Club. Founded by the first members of JSSC in 1947 to maintain contact between officers who had passed through the college, it embraced the National Defence College, the Joint Services Defence College and now the Joint Services Command and Staff College formed in 1997.

Members – there are more than 3,300 worldwide – are sent an annual magazine, The Cormorant, and there is an annual reunion dinner at JSSC. Keeping the membership database up to date is a bit of a challenge for the secretary, Wg Cdr Dave Best, so if you are a member but haven't heard from him during the past 12 months, update your details on 01793 788110 or e-mail him at cormorantclubsecretary@jssc.org

Shropshire Regimental Museum

Mounted infantry's busy war

A RARE medal, regimentally-speaking, has been acquired at auction by the Shropshire Regimental Museum. It features seven clasps.

The Queen's South Africa Medal was awarded to Capt J J White of the 2nd Battalion, The King's Shropshire Light Infantry. He commanded the 85th Mounted Infantry Company of the 4th Mounted Infantry Regiment, which had a rather different experience of the Boer War to its parent battalion.

White's clasps are for the Relief of Kimberley, Paardeberg, Driefontein, Johannesburg, Diamond Hill, Belfast and South Africa 1901, indicating his presence at a number of key battles.

MAXIMUM NUMBER

Seven was the maximum number of clasps the KSLI could have earned, and Capt White's is the only seven-clasp officer's medal in the possession of the museum at Shrewsbury Castle.

He led the 120-strong mounted company from its raising in January until he was invalided home in September 1900, although he did return to South Africa in 1901. White was mentioned in dispatches by Lord Roberts in that year, but what became of him after the war is not known.

The Shropshire Regimental Museum in The Castle, Shrewsbury, is open 1000-1700 daily, reduced hours in winter, closed all January. Admission £2 adults, £1 seniors, children free, parties by appointment. Tel 01743 262292, e-mail shropsrm@zoom.co.uk

PRAETORIANS, PC

GAMERS must battle their way through the deserts of Egypt and the frozen lands of the Gauls to the heart of the Empire itself, Rome, in this epic combat strategy game from Pyros Studios, based on the military campaigns of Julius Caesar.

The road to Rome is divided into 24 missions and is far from easy, as the lands that need to be conquered en route are heavily defended by thousands of troops, all with their own special skills, tactics and war machines.

Victory will depend solely on the strategy adopted by the player – how well they deploy the troop formations under their command, combine units and ruthlessly exploit their enemy's weaknesses.

In Praetorians gamers can choose to command not only the Romans, but also the ferocious Barbarians and the Egyptians. Each of the three civilisations has its own distinct fighting styles and abilities.

The Romans deploy disciplined formations and well-drilled troops while the Barbarians rely on raw strength and adaptability to different terrains, and the Egyptians employ a combination of religious fanaticism and science to complement their military units.

VERDICT: I came, I saw, I conquered. Can you? A welcome blast from the past. 8/10

FAST-food giants McDonalds have added videogames to the menu in the USA by introducing GameCube consoles to 14 of their restaurants. The machines are free to play, with a limit on the amount of time each customer can spend on them.

NINTENDO are lobbying for trade sanctions to help bring organised large-scale piracy under control after more than a quarter of a million pirated Game Boy Advance software units were seized in China.

The company's efforts are particularly aimed at curbing counterfeit operations in China, Paraguay and Mexico, which cost Nintendo $650 million in lost sales last year.

POPULAR UK cable, satellite and digital channel Bravo is to increase its gaming coverage with the purchase of Gamer.tv's Endzone, which covers the crossover between sports celebrities and videogames.

Described as a "unique and historic portrait of the worldwide interactive entertainment industry", the show's guests include David Beckham, Tiger Woods, Tony Hawk, Tim Henman and Anna Kournikova.

COMMAND & CONQUER GENERALS, PC

OUT NOW

THIS latest addition to the hugely successful Command & Conquer 3D real-time strategy series puts players' trigger fingers on the pulse of modern warfare.

Assuming the role of one of the game's nine featured Generals, players must control massive armies equipped with cutting-edge and near-future military weaponry across a globe teetering on the brink of Armageddon.

In Command & Conquer Generals you can choose to command one of three unique armies inspired by real-world ideologies; the high-tech US force, the swarming Chinese war machine, or the resourceful Global Liberation Army.

Each force has a high-tech arsenal which can be customised with a host of new units and tactics on offer to the gamer. Generals can opt to assemble their war machine with top-secret Aurora strike fighters, massive Paladin battle tanks, angry mobs, skilled hackers and more than 60 other distinctive units.

The game also allows you to wage war in more ways than ever before, with thrilling air-to-air duels, urban combat, and an enhanced veterancy model.

True to its predecessors, Command & Conquer Generals' 27-mission single-player campaign is complemented with a host of multi-player options that will ensure this latest offering from Electronic Arts keeps your PC busy for some time.

VERDICT: Well worth engaging.

KONAMI'S latest release offers a mix of 2D and 3D shoot-em-up action, as one or two players take on hordes of monsters, bio-mechanical creatures and robotic adversaries.

Armed with a succession of increasingly powerful weapons, including multiple direction rifles and flame-throwers, players must run, jump and blast their way through a series of alien-infested stages before tackling huge end-of-level adversaries. The game also features snowboarding and motorcycle-based stages and some spectacular pyrotechnics.

Story of mercenaries from out of Africa

EXECUTIVE Outcomes (EO) was a private military advisory company formed in South Africa to train the Angolan Armed Forces in 1994 after the resumption of a 20-year-long conflict with UNITA guerrillas. The South Africans found themselves at the sharp end, fighting as mercenaries in formed units. Writing from personal experience, American journalist Jim Hooper tells the story in Bloodsong! First Hand Accounts of a Private Army in Action (Collins, £19.99). His revealing book helps to dispel the idea that the modern mercenary is a "social misfit".

Powerful study of the journalism of war

AS you would expect when publisher National Geographic teams up with an author who specialises in war censorship in journalism, the powerful From the Front: The Story of War by Michael S. Sweeney (£30) complements an intriguing text on the history of war reporting with stunning visual imagery. Many of the words are by war correspondents from the Crimea to the present, including Ernest Hemingway and Ed Murrow. The illustrations are by some of the all-time greats such as Robert Capa.

Why Iraq hung on to its chemical weapons

THE very title makes you sit up. In Weapons of Mass Destruction (Weidenfeld & Nicolson, £18.99), defence journalist Robert Hutchinson argues that in Iraq the inspectors' task was "hopeless" because Saddam believed these warheads had twice saved his regime, first against Iran in the 1980s and then in 1991, when Coalition forces shrank from pushing through to Baghdad for fear he might use chemical weapons against them. Hutchinson says Iraq has the know-how to build a nuclear weapon and warns that any new ruler of the country "may be unencumbered by UN sanctions and would find it easier to go down this path".

Britain's greatest

We talk to Sir Winston Churchill's granddaughter about her latest book on the wartime leader

BOOKS about Sir Winston Churchill – recently voted the greatest Briton – are not uncommon.

But the latest has the distinction of being written by someone who knew the Second World War leader better than most – his granddaughter, Celia Sandys.

An acknowledged authority on the life of Churchill, Celia is the daughter of Diana, Sir Winston's eldest daughter, and Lord Duncan-Sandys, a former cabinet minister and member of his father-in-law's wartime government.

Celia spent a great deal of time with her grandfather, who died in 1965 when she was 21.

Her book Churchill, which accompanies a three-part TV documentary series about his life, is clear, intimate, and easy to read without being condescending.

"It is an easy guide to Churchill and a good basic reference book," she ventured during an interview with Soldier at her home in Wiltshire.

Containing more than 100 illustrations, it includes rarely seen portraits, as well as letters and documents from the family archives and Celia's personal recollections. Of the funeral, she said: "That was an extraordinary occasion, an emotional, almost surreal experience."

"It wasn't a tragedy. He was over 90 and his life had been ebbing away for some years. He was ready to go."

It is her personal experiences of Churchill the man that give the book and TV series special significance.

"As a child, my brother, sister and I spent a lot of our school holidays with our grandparents, first at Chequers then at Chartwell," she said. "At 16 I went on my first holiday with my grandfather which was on the Onassis yacht. This was very exciting and glamorous."

"It was a wonderful opportunity to spend an extended period of time with my grandfather in a very different environment."

She also spent several holidays with Churchill in the south of France.

"We all adored him and although I was a child I saw how other people wanted to hear what he had to say. There was an aura about him and he had an enormous charm."

"I know that when he was younger he was a difficult man but when I knew him this was not the case."

Patriotism was a strong characteristic. "He was very proud of his country and although he was a Victorian, he had the ability to look ahead, see what was coming and act on it."

She spoke about one of the great disappointments of his life – losing the 1945 general election. "I think he lost because everyone had a family member in the Forces and the Labour Party said it would bring them home. Equally, the Conservatives had not been popular before the war."

"Nevertheless he felt that he had not been treated well and that he had done a good job."

"It was great shock to him to lose to Attlee, although my grandmother said this may be a blessing in disguise. He replied that if it was, the disguise was very effective. In retrospect it was clear that he was a very tired man and needed to take a rest."

Celia Sandys said many people felt too intimidated to pick up a book by or about Churchill.

"In fact he wrote in a style that is easy to read," she said. "I hope that those who already know about him will enjoy my book and that it will appeal to others who have never read a book about him, including school pupils. It has a lot of pictures and information and tells the story in a succinct manner."

Celia Sandys, who is married to retired Maj Gen Ken Perkins, has written other books about her grandfather – From Winston with Love and Kisses (1994), an examination of his youth, and Churchill: Wanted Dead or Alive (2000) describing his adventures during the Boer War.

Another, Chasing Churchill, detailing his travels, is also set for publication this April and a fourth, We Shall Not Fail, is planned for the American market in June.

The first episode of the ITV series goes out in the UK on April 3 at 9pm.

● Churchill by Celia Sandys is published by Contender Books on April 10, priced £20.

Distinction in battle helps ensure survival

IN his foreword to The North Irish Horse: A Hundred Years of Service (Spellmount, £20) the Duke of Westminster notes that the regiment has done well to escape TA cuts of the past 50 years and "its reputation in high places has done much to ensure that survival". Since its formation in 1902 the Horse has served with distinction in both world wars and, as an armoured car regiment, now serves as a squadron of the Queen's Own Yeomanry and a squadron of Royal Signals. Richard Doherty maintains his usual high standard of narrative, backed by thorough research.

Aid to understanding a dangerous world

WHEN Col Andrew Duncan and Michel Opatowski published Trouble Spots in October 2000 the book contained a vast amount of global strategic information. Since then the world has moved on considerably and while Dangerous Destinations (Sutton, £12.99) – a revised, expanded and updated paperback version – is similarly vulnerable to the speed of events (it went to press before the current Iraq situation began to develop in earnest) it will nonetheless prove an invaluable desktop companion in understanding an increasingly volatile world.

Win the latest Matthew Hervey adventure

BRIG Allan Mallinson's popular series of Matthew Hervey historical military novels reaches number five with The Sabre's Edge (Bantam, £16.99) and we have two copies to give away in a simple competition, plus two paperbacks of the fourth instalment, A Call to Arms. Name Hervey's regiment on a postcard and send it to us by April 30. First and second correct entries drawn at random will win a copy of the latest book; senders of the third and fourth pulled out of the hat will be sent the paperback. Usual rules apply.

SOLDIER to soldier

Praying for rough men

AS this column is written our troops are moving into Iraq. By the time it is published the course of the war will in all probability have been decided.

In these circumstances there is only one message which we want to convey to the soldiers at whom it is directed: Good luck and come home safely.

Although there has been widespread opposition to war – voiced both in Parliament and on Britain's high streets – the nation is absolutely united in supporting its Servicemen and women in the Gulf.

The media, whether for or against conflict, has identified with Britain's soldiers, sailors and airmen. Much of the venom directed at supposed kit deficiencies has been filed on the basis that "our boys" deserve better.

Whatever unfolds, we pray for a quick resolution to the crisis, a bloodless liberation for the people of Iraq from their foul dictator, and a triumphant homecoming for the tens of thousands of "rough men" – British, American, Gurkha, Fijian, Australian and others – who will make it happen.

Marine Corps General James Conway quoted George Orwell when he exhorted them at a camp in northern Kuwait: "Our countrymen should rest well at night because rough men stand ready to visit violence on those who would do them harm." But we won't rest well until they are home.

Gilty as charged

A cap-badged to the QLR will be ed version, left crest, enamelled red rose of Lan- the Queen's Crown, over a scroll finished in burnished gilt. Warrant ntinue to wear a primrose diamond and an improved material will be s will continue to wear a gold wire to include the crown.

HANDS up all who spotted our not-so-deliberate mistake in a story about The Queen's Lancashire Regiment's new enamelled badge (Update, March). According to the report, see above, it is finished in "burnished gilt".

We stand convicted.

Home truths

Sue Bonney

I hate this bit, the waiting bit

IMPOSSIBLE almost to know what to write, given you won't read this until several days after I have written it – and who knows what will have happened by then.

But with any luck the news will be good. I hate this bit . . . the waiting bit.

We might also serve, those who stand and wait, but it doesn't make it any easier, especially for families and especially in these days of instant communication. Just as you are talking yourself into a positive frame of mind, a dramatically-phrased news report can whip your fragile calm away and leave you desperately anxious.

It's drama and good reporting to them – but the possible fate of your soldier to you. Two things you don't need, waiting at home – 24-hour news with no news to report yet hours to fill – and an over-active imagination.

And then there are mobile phones. These days, this is how anyone under 30 expects to communicate, and those soldiers allowed to take mobiles did just that, especially when the welfare phones were yet to be set up. The withdrawal of personal mobiles caused not a little anxiety back at the ranch – why had it happened, and how on earth were they going to talk to each other now?

Sue Bonney is
Editor of the AFF

AFF received calls and e-mails from partners and fiancées desperate to re-establish mobile communication, despite the vast expense. We had to explain the security reasons why and I found myself trying to point out gently to a fiancée that, in fact, it might be much better if she didn't have instant communication with her soldier.

If she didn't know about the daily problems he had, she wouldn't have to worry about them – and nor would her soldier have to worry about hers. Blueys might be a little slower, but in some ways they are a better way to communicate. I didn't ask if she had expected him to take his mobile into action – but I did wonder if she had thought that one through.

The thing is, you have to let them get on with the job and trust them to do it well. They can't do that on the other end of a mobile.

THE national media has been beating an unaccustomed path to AFF's door of late, keen to contact Army families to find out "how they feel".

I suspect the period of inaction after deployment meant they were looking for ways to liven up the somewhat uneventful coverage of sand and uniforms with emotional "human" stories.

We have been inundated with requests to find different kinds of Army families willing to talk to the press, TV and radio, and some of the slants on proposed stories have been breathtaking in their sheer shallowness. But some offered us the chance to get over to the public what Army life means for families, and they were worth taking.

Talking to the media

It can only help the Service community for the general public to understand some of the realities of our lifestyle.

We have a lot to be proud of, especially the way in which our community pulls together in times like this: the courage and practical realism of the families, the support they give to their soldiers and each other, and the support the command, units and welfare agencies are giving to them.

Cut off? We'll put you back in touch

AFF has heard from some partners and parents of Regular, TA and reservists soldiers who don't live on a patch or near a unit and can feel cut off from the mutual support and information, despite everyone's best efforts, especially when direct contact with their soldier is limited.

We are able to put them in touch with the local support systems near to them.

Our website at www.aff.org.uk carries the latest information on Op Telic and links to other relevant websites, such as the Army Welfare Service, which carry details of where support can be found.

If you need help or information, contact AFF on 01980 615525. There are a lot of people out there working hard to support every kind of Army family.

Will fleet management put our vehicles out of reach?

WITH the creation of the new Civil Contingency Reaction Force (CCRF) from within the Reserve Forces, I can see a transport issue looming.

As a Territorial Army Infantry unit we are subject to the new vehicle fleet management process, which means we have to book our own vehicles (currently parked outside our TA centre) six weeks in advance of any training or deployment.

Prize letter

No booking – no vehicle, and that includes any short-notice emergencies.

I understand this is because all our green fleet may be held centrally in the future and distributed on an as-required basis, though no one seems to be able to confirm this.

As CCRF we are meant to be a highly-mobile force with its own integral communications, command and transport based on an infantry battalion orbat. Does this now mean we expect Al-Qaida to give us six weeks' notice for the next September 11? – Name and Address supplied.

Lt Col Bob Lloyd, SO1 Whole Fleet Management project team, responds: Your correspondent raises concerns about the new Civil Contingency Reaction Force (CCRF). As far as Whole Fleet Management (WFM) is concerned, the policy is not yet implemented but is still subject to trials, which began last year and are continuing with the aim of incremental introduction of WFM from 2005.

The need to book vehicles six weeks in advance is not a requirement of WFM and can only be one that has been imposed by the author's unit. Booking in advance for training resources is understandable but for operations is neither intended nor achievable.

Under WFM all vehicles will be controlled centrally with the aid of a management information system (MIS), but they will not necessarily be held centrally. Some will be held in unit lines and TA centres, some in an operational pool and some close to training areas, as is the case with the existing Training Materiel Parks (TMP).

For those units, like CCRF-nominated battalions that might have to be deployed rapidly, any green vehicles they require will be held in unit lines or a TMP if it is in a suitable location for quick response. How many vehicles would be required and where they should be held is one of the aims of the 2003 trial being conducted by (among others) the East of England Regiment, a battalion on which CCRF is based.

No changes will be made to the existing system until all the trials have been completed and assessed. If any unit or individual has a question about how the Army's WFM policy might be implemented, or wish to contribute to the debate, they are encouraged to phone the WFM Integrated Project Team on Salisbury Military (94331) 3108 or civilian 01722 433108.

Why mobilise Terrier medics while Regulars stay behind?

I FIND it incomprehensible that 30 Regular Army permanent staff instructors (PSIs), all combat medical technicians (CMT) class 1 and all with at least 14 years' service, have been ordered to assist with the medical processing of Territorial Army personnel at the Reserves Training and Mobilisation Centre at Chilwell.

This is not what I and most of my fellow CMTs would expect to be doing at this time. To be told you will not be deploying on Op Telic is one thing but to have to undertake a task normally done by junior staff is demoralising.

When medical services are undermanned, is it not a waste of our training and experience? Call up 30 CMTs from the TA to carry out this role. – Name and address supplied.

AS a PSI in a medical unit I am concerned that the MoD sees fit to call up the Territorial Army at this time. The Army Medical Service is undermanned, but to replace a trained soldier who has practical experience with a TA medic defies logic.

Chilwell has called in Regulars and TA from all Services to man the station, while nobody considered using the first batch of reservists to do the job. I have to train the rest knowing all the effort I put into my trade skills will be wasted while others I consider less qualified than myself are off to do my job. – Name and unit supplied.

YOUR letters provide a real insight into the issues at the top of your agenda... but please keep them as short as possible.

Please be brief

The more space you take up to get your point across, the less room there is for other letters, and we are anxious to use as many as we can. E-mails should include your name and location at the bottom (not necessarily for publication).

Anonymous contributions will be binned. The Editor reserves the right to accept or reject letters, and to amend for length, clarity or style.

The Army Medical Department

replies: RTMC Chilwell is responsible for the mobilisation and demobilisation of all individuals deploying to operational theatres, and specifically for Op Telic. To achieve its task the centre has a Regular group of medical staff, which during periods of increased operational tempo, requires an augmentation for a variety of establishments. It is currently mobilising more than 3,000 TA and Regular reservist personnel.

Mobilising such a large number of reservists is manpower-intensive and critical to making operations possible. The personnel from Land units currently augmenting the Regular medical staff are carrying out a vital but ultimately temporary function before being returned to their normal duty station.

Personnel augmenting RTMC have been selected for a number of reasons:

- They are currently downgraded;
- Their unit is selected for Op Fresco;
- They are currently in posts that have been identified as retained tasks;
- They are performing rear party duties;
- Their unit is in its training year.

It's easier to overtake bunched-up convoys

THE traditional method of military convoys spacing themselves out used to make good sense because other motorists were able to pull in between the vehicles in the convoy and allow other vehicles to pass.

Today few motorists understand lane discipline and stay in the outer lanes until they have overtaken everything in sight.

May I suggest that convoy commanders encourage their vehicles to bunch up, so minimising the time inconsiderate "must-overtake-everything-before-pulling-over" motorists spend in an overtaking lane, holding everyone else up in the process.

The classic example of this is on the two-lane A303 in Wiltshire, where a car that insists on passing every military vehicle in a convoy before moving back to the left-hand lane causes unnecessary congestion. — Maj Giles R Austin RAMC.

The Defence Surface Transport Policy Branch responds: Maj Giles has highlighted a number of interesting points in his letter, although his main criticism is targeted at the driving standards of other road-users. It is a sad fact that some drivers do not return to the near-side lane after overtaking, even when it is safe to do so.

To teach MoD drivers to bunch up in a convoy would be unsafe. The MoD trains its drivers to drive in convoy to a standard set by Nato policy, which is incorporated into Ch22 (Vehicle Convoy Procedures) of JSP 341 (Defence Road Transport Regulations).

The minimum convoy distance between individual vehicles in free-flowing traffic on A and B class roads is 70m (reduced to 50m at night) and in built-up areas 20m, where possible. Although these convoys may cause some inconvenience to the public, public roads are the only place where MoD units can practise convoy procedures correctly.

PS . . .

Why did they join?

MY husband is a member of the Territorial Army and has just received his call-out papers. He is apprehensive, as I am, but it's what he has trained for.

What is really annoying me is the amount of people who are now trying to find ways of not going. Some are using the excuse of work commitments (for example, working for themselves), so why did they join the TA?

They seem to want the extra income and the bounty but when it comes to the crunch they don't want to put this into practice. This gets the TA a bad reputation, especially with the Regulars. They should consider their careers in the TA. — Name and address supplied.

Crossing swords

IN response to Cpl Brown's gripe ("Badge of fitness", Feb) I would debate the fact that para- and commando-trained personnel don't use their qualification within units.

As most soldiers are aware, the ethos and bearing of the majority of these individuals is reflected on a daily basis.

However, despite current trivial matters such as Op Telic and Op Fresco, I am sympathetic to his plight and suggest that in lieu of crossed swords on his working dress he dons a tight-fitting PTI vest for use around the Naafi on an evening.

Then again, there is more to life. — Cpl A Barr, Krefeld, Germany.

This eternal conflict

I HAVE to smile when I read letters in Soldier regarding the lifestyle of married versus single members of the British Army (WO1 Harvey, "Time to act as the professionals we all are", Feb).

Was it ever so? I was called to the Colours more than half a century ago, and stayed for 34 years 86 days. I wanted to stay longer but ER II would not agree.

The differences have always been there. No more so than in the Far East (Singapore, Hong Kong etc). Single members lived on a totally different planet from married Servicemen. Maybe singles were envious or jealous?

For my first 15 years I served as a happy single Serviceman, then saw the errors of my ways, joined the enemy and married. I have never looked back.

Thanks for a great magazine, which I have read and inwardly digested over many years. — Len Danby ex-WO (RAF), Brampton, Cambs.

Negative responses only to be expected

I SUPPOSE it was only to be expected that the two responses to "I'm gay and feel I have no support" (Jan) would be unsympathetic and negative.

Both responses (Feb) were patronising and based on a seemingly deliberate misinterpretation of the originator's letter.

Nowhere in the soldier's letter did I read that he was seeking "special attention". Nowhere did he state he was being "picked on". He was not trying to make a "big deal" out of his sexuality (the opposite was true) and he did not imply that he was in a "terrible unit". He simply wanted support.

Gay people have to confront issues about themselves that others never have to face. During this process, their self-confidence and personal morale can take a hammering and if this happens, they need someone to confide in who is sympathetic, non-judgmental and supportive. The Army welfare system has many such people, although few will be able to talk from personal experience. The Army accepts it is lawful for a serving soldier to

I tried to hide being gay but it didn't work

I RESPOND to "I'm gay and feel I have no support" (Jan). As an openly gay soldier it is my opinion that only the MoD military correctness squad would suggest it is possible to keep your military and private lives separate.

I tried to hide being gay for many years and it didn't work. I suffered from gossiping, innuendoes and whispering from all ranks. I felt forced to "come out".

I underestimated the paranoia that coming out would cause.

Before I could tell my family, phantom telephone calls had already been made to them. I became

So when the respondent states "keep doing your job to the best of your ability and keep your personal life personal", how is it possible that one will not impact on the other?

The acceptance of homosexuals by Army's policy-makers has not led to the the object of curiosity and it took the best part of a year for all the fuss to die down. I found the whole situation very hard to cope with.

Normal channels offered little solace to what was at the time a unique issue. SSAFA-Forces Help is slowly getting better and I thank them for it. But I was

But until the author of the original letter is able to feel totally comfortable reading Gay Times in the privacy of his living accommodation, he (and thousands like him) will need to be reassured that there is support available. Meanwhile, the anonymity of the authors of the responding letters means we have no idea what kind of people they are. But I can guess. – Maj I R Peaple, Arborfield.

Time to respect each other

I AM a WO2 and have been in the Infantry all my career. I am gay and remain in the closet because I see no reason to come out. I enjoy the Army and the career I have and I don't see why I should give it up because of other people's prejudices.

I have made use of the www.aflaga.co.uk website and speak to guys on the net who are in the Army and use the site for anonymity. I have met a few in person and they are surprised when they realise they can have a career and keep their personal life private.

I am not on a trip to "out" people or fly the rainbow flag; on the contrary, I just think the Army's combat effectiveness is not affected by sexual orientation. Suffice it to say gay people have been in the Army for longer than we care to admit.

It's time being gay in the Forces was not be an issue. Once we learn to be respectful of one another these issues will disappear and people can get on with their lives and not suffer the way some have. – Name and address supplied.

I still haven't got my jubilee medal

I AM still waiting for my Queen's Golden Jubilee Medal almost a year after it was issued. Am I the only one?

I am an NCO in the Territorial Army, currently serving on Full-Time Reserve Service (FTRS). I enlisted in 1994.

The long wait diminishes the sense of achievement and pride gained by tours of duty in locations such as Afghanistan and Sierra Leone. – Name and unit supplied.

PS12(A) replies: The reason it has taken 12 months to issue 96,000 Queen's Golden Jubilee Medals is that the Army Medal Office received 8,400 a month from the Royal Mint.

The issue to units was broken down into four priority categories for issue over a 12-month period. This process has now been completed with the exception of some difficult cases, including those on FTRS.

The computer database set up to capture all those eligible for the medal examines soldiers' Records of Service. This has worked reasonably well and all but 2,000 medals have been issued on time and in accordance with the issue programme.

The Record of Service of those on FTRS is incomplete and so eligibility cannot be confirmed for many individuals. These cases have been put on hold until the main issue programme has been completed.

In cases where the Record of Service is not available for those on FTRS, commanding officers have been told to make checks, sign a certificate of eligibility and send it to the Army Medal Office.

No such certificate has been received in the case of your correspondent.

THEN AND THEN

25 YEARS AGO

From Soldier, April 1978: "Funny money" is to be withdrawn from Berlin. The British Armed Forces Service Vouchers – or Bafs – have finally been phased out and the garrison will now be paid in Deutschmarks through local banks. The vouchers were introduced in 1946, primarily to stop Servicemen profiteering on the black market.

50 YEARS AGO

From Soldier, April 1953: Two soldiers of the 1st Battalion, The Lancashire Fusiliers, above, search a grass-thatched hut in Kenya. They are among troops sweeping through the bush in operations against Mau Mau terrorists. When the state of emergency was declared in October last year, the Lancashire Fusiliers were flown in from Suez to Kenya.

Why can't my wife and I share a room in Kosovo?

MY wife and I are working together on an operational tour in Kosovo. We are based in Slim Lines, Pristina, where she lives in a room of her own in a mixed corridor with mixed showers and toilets. I also have a room of my own.

We have a certificate of marriage and we share a married quarter in Germany, which we continue to pay for. Why will the Army not allow us to share a room because we are on an operational deployment?

The Army has a situation here where it could improve the morale of two people and it would not affect that of others. – LCpl Horrocks, BFPO 559.

PS4(A) responds: While acknowledging that the situation the Horrockses find themselves in is somewhat unusual, co-habitation in single-living accommodation, whether on operations or in barracks, is unacceptable to the Services.

This measure is taken not only in the interests of unit cohesion and discipline, but also in recognition of an individual's right to privacy – not everyone has the good fortune to occupy single rooms on operations.

All personnel deployed on operations, regardless of marital status, are considered as single soldiers for accommodation purposes as it is clearly impractical to cater for the specific needs of married couples.

PS4(A) does not agree with LCpl Horrocks's assertion that their situation could be addressed without a detrimental impact on the morale of married and single peers on operations.

Where the privileges of a minority cannot be extended to all, the potentially divisive nature of an apparently reasonable proposal should never be underestimated.

Operational welfare covers a wide range of activities and is designed to meet the needs of all deployed personnel. Welfare policy must apply evenly across all theatres worldwide, from the expeditionary (such as Operation Telic) to established operations such as the Balkans.

PS...

Mobile phones

MY wife has been compulsory mobilised and is serving with 6 Supply Regiment RLC in Kuwait. They were made to hand in their mobile phones in theatre. Can you tell me why this is, as many personnel I know, including those from my own unit, have been encouraged to take mobile phones as an alternative form of communication. – LCpl Bruce Thompson, Lossiemouth.

PJHQ Media Ops responds: In sensitive operations mobile phones may be taken away for operational security reasons. The decision is made at command level and is normally only for a short period of time. However, any possibility of outbreak of war may extend this period until it is no longer deemed a security issue.

Parking charges

MY heart goes out to Lt Col A D Hendrickse and his parking charges at the military hospital unit at Frimley Park hospital (March). What does he think it is like for the NHS nurses on a third of his wage, or the NHS technicians on a fifth of his wage or less? – Flt Lt (Retd) J H Carr RAF, Salisbury.

Give us credit...

I HAVE been serving for 18 years and have been posted to many theatres. Having returned from Cyprus in September 2001 and settled into (expensive) UK living, I decided to apply for an Egg credit card.

This was refused and I was directed to a credit agency. Due to my not having lived in the UK for more than two years, I have a low-to-negligible credit rating. I have another credit card (obtained through using my wife's parents' address) and a £84,000 mortgage. Why is it that, through no fault of our own, we are still treated as financial outcasts?

Must I wait until September 4 (the magic two-year point)? Yours without plastic. – Name and address supplied.

They took £2,075 off my pay in one go

MINE is another story of a soldier having nearly all his salary taken off him in one go by Glasgow.

I was transferred to the Army Air Corps, backdated to last July. The trade I have transferred to is pilot, but someone decided I was no longer flying, even though the words "helicopter pilot" were printed on the form for the reason of transfer, and stopped my flying pay.

If that wasn't bad enough, the whole amount was backdated to July 2002 and about £2,075 was deducted in one go.

I am a homeowner and have bills to pay. To add insult to injury I was on leave at the time and had to go into work and my bank to sort out the mess. My pay office were fantastic, much to their credit as they were dealing with two others in the same boat.

Why does this keep happening? There is always an excuse from the Army Personnel Centre for delays and errors but no one ever writes to say sorry for the distress.

What would have happened if I was operationally deployed and my wife had been left to sort it all out?

Someone must input the data for it to be actioned. Is there not an amount, which they cannot go over (even if you do owe it)? Do they not realise how much £2,000-plus is to a soldier when he or she loses it in one go? – Sgt Wesson, Dishforth, Yorks.

DSPS(A) replies: Sgt Wesson transferred to the AAC in July 2002, although his transfer was not actioned until December 2002. The RAO does conduct a monthly check of all pay statements (which are received in the unit usually one week before the end of each month).

The error was picked up on this check and a payment was made to Sgt Wesson on February 3. The full balance was restored to his pay account on February 14.

The error is very much regretted, but due to the flexibility of the Army's administrative systems at unit level, a solution was rapidly applied.

Comparison table of pensions didn't paint the whole picture

THE table in your February edition ("Staying or going – the choice is yours", Page 26), which described the relative merits of staying in the Army or trying your luck in civvy street, made some pretty subjective and selective comparisons, particularly in the field of pensions.

We can all recognise that our defined benefit pension is a valuable part of our overall package, but to make it appear better than it is, compared with provision in civilian life, does no favours to our soldiers and their dependants.

For example, the table makes it clear that we do not have to pay for our pensions, which is nonsense. Our pay is abated at source, currently by seven per cent, and this is just contributions by another name.

Most of the principal benefits of our pension scheme also score badly alongside comparators in the public sector, such as the police, firefighters and civil service. Elsewhere in the private sector there are also good and bad pension conditions. Soldiers and their families need to know the facts, not just simplistic and misleading one-line comparisons. – Maj Gen J C M Gordon, Forces Pension Society.

Apology for confidential letter that went astray

I WRITE in response to Sgt Ford's letter ("One that got away", Feb) to reassure anyone who contacts the Army Equal Opportunities Branch or SSAFA Confidential Support Line (by letter, e-mail or telephone) that the matter will be dealt with in the strictest confidence.

Under no circumstances are the details of any individual's concerns revealed to the chain of command.

The quality and confidentiality of these services is continuously scrutinised, independently of the Army. Test letters are regularly sent to the advertised addresses to ensure no tampering with their contents takes place and all have been received without concern.

An investigation showed that Sgt Ford's letter was never received by the Army Equal Opportunities Branch. In this instance systems in place in the Upavon post room, where mail addressed to Army Equal Opportunities enters the military postal distribution system in Upavon, failed.

An error was made, causing the letter to be misdirected and treated as routine correspondence. While of no comfort to Sgt Ford, this was a much-regretted one-off and orders and procedures in the post room have now been further tightened.

I close by apologising to Sgt Ford for the unnecessary distress he has gone through and have written to him with a full explanation. – Maj Tony Leadbeater, PS4(A), Upavon.

This allowance covers extra costs, not turmoil

A LETTER from a senior NCO – "Disturbance Allowance discriminates against singlies" published in the March issue – has drawn the following response from PS10(A) SO2b:

SOME basic points that seem to have been confused by the letter-writer may be worth explaining.

First, a move from single publicly-funded accommodation does not attract Disturbance Allowance (DA) for single or unaccompanied personnel.

Second, while we do not dispute that moving on posting is "an inconvenience" and "turmoil" for both married and single personnel, DA is not a payment to alleviate inconvenience but to assist with the extra costs that moves entail. These include cleaning of curtains and furnishings, paying for extra rubbish removals, the cost of changing school uniforms, increased insurance costs and so on. For those in single publicly-funded accommodation, most of these costs are already met by the taxpayer through a variety of contracts. Those who are not eligible for the allowance are entitled to claim up to £38 to cover the insurance increase for personal effects during transit.

And thirdly, single personnel may claim the allowance if they move from their private property to another private property at their duty stations as part of a recognised move (known as a qualifying move).

Last year the Personal Baggage and Furniture Allowance for UK and North-West Europe was increased to six cubic metres for all ranks. This has more than trebled the allowance for most personnel. While we cannot cater for every requirement we hope this increase caters for the majority.
