It's an honour

Men of the 1st Battalion, The Royal Scots (The Royal Regiment) form a guard of honour for the Princess Royal, their Colonel-in-Chief, on her arrival at the Palace of Holyroodhouse, Edinburgh, where she represented the Queen at the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. Maj Alex Anderson commanded the guard

Army spreads its Web wide

THE British Army has launched itself on the Internet with the creation of its own Web site where users can surf through 200 pages of information.

The operation was masterminded by Maj Nick Sharples PWRR, serving on the staff of the Director of Public Relations (Army).

It offers anyone on the Internet an opportunity to find out more about the British Army, and to take part in the Army World Challenge, a game based on operational scenarios.

Challenge is designed for the 16-24 age group, target of the Army's recruiters.

Each game begins with a mission brief, before players are invited to make a military decision from a choice of three.

The careers section offers guidance on joining up, and encourages "visitors" to ask for an information pack. Army organisation is explained in depth and there is a glossary of military terms and abbreviations.

"We have explained the Army's roles and functions," explained Maj Sharples. "Regiments and corps have contributed brief histories and details of their main recruiting areas. I expect more quality and quantity of information as they become aware of the potential of the Web."

Photographs and informa-

tion on weapons, vehicles and equipment can be accessed.

Adventurous training and sport have a section which will include reports on Army-led expeditions.

Click on the "Army World" button and maps and information on deployments worldwide will be available.

"Photographs will be available as high resolution images. Our Internet site will provide a major source of Army images."

The site will also offer latest news on what the Army is up to, including details of events such as the Edinburgh Tattoo and Royal Tournament. Press releases issued by Army Public Information offices worldwide will eventually be on site.

Soldier readers connected to the Internet need not feel left out. It is planned to launch an electronic version of the magazine with stories and pictures from every issue.

To connect to the British Army Web site, use the Uniform Resource Locator <http://www.Army.mod.uk>.

RBL stakes future on youngsters

WHO said the Royal British Legion was for the older generation? A new fund-raising initiative to coincide with its 75th anniversary year will focus on three-year-olds.

The youngsters will be fleet-of-foot racehorses competing at York on October 12 in a race entitled The Royal British Legion Stakes. It will be run in conjunction with a sweepstake with £10,000 as top prize.

Branches, clubs and other groups – Army messes, for example – are being invited to sell tickets. For each £1 sold they will be able to keep 12p for their Poppy Appeal or for a charity.

The RBL aims to turn the race into an annual event with up to £60,000 prize money.

Tickets are available from RBL Sweepstake, Crown Lane, Cressage, Shropshire SY5 6BT (for England and Wales) or Bennet House, 17 Lansdown Crescent, Portrush, Co Antrim BT56 8AY (for Northern Ireland). They should be returned by September 4.

Yorkshire Yeomen's badge link

TERRITORIAL Army soldiers from Yorkshire's oldest regiment welcomed their new cap badge in the traditional way – with champagne.

The badge, the Army's newest, will be worn by men and women serving in the King's Own Yorkshire Yeomanry (Light Infantry). The regiment maintains its historic links in the bugle of the KOYLI, while two crossed cavalry lances mark its place within the Royal Armoured Corps.

Formerly the 8th Battalion, The (Yorkshire) Light Infantry, the unit's name-change reflects its new role as a light reconnaissance regiment. New name and cap badge will be formally adopted at a parade on August 3.

"We are delighted with it," said commanding officer Lt Col Mark Rollo-Walker. "Although it is an Armoured Corps version, it still symbolises our 200-year link with Yorkshire."

Mountain munitions destroyed

PEACE on the high slopes of the Mourne Mountains was briefly interrupted when the Army carried out a controlled explosion to make safe Second World War munitions found off the Brandy Pad in the Clonachullion area. Called in after ramblers had reported the find to the Royal Ulster Constabulary, a bomb disposal team was flown by helicopter to the mountain slopes to destroy several 155mm shells.

Helped by good weather conditions, the team spent four hours on the mountain carrying out a detailed examination of the area for other possible devices before blowing up the munitions.

The Army Benevolent Fund provides help to any man or woman and their families if they are serving or have served in the British Army and are in real need. This help is given in two ways: through grants to supplement Corps or Regimental aid and by financial support to over 70 national charities providing for the special needs of those in distress.

Our overall aim is to bring help to the many cases where state assistance is inapplicable, inadequate or unable to meet the immediate need.

Your donation, covenant or legacy will provide invaluable assistance for those who served their country.

Tri-Service transport school launched

THE former Army School of Mechanical Transport at Leconfield, east Yorkshire, has become tri-Service, taking students from the Royal Marines and, later this year, from the Royal Air Force.

Re-named the Defence School of Transport, the establishment is expected this year to train almost 10,000 students on a variety of courses from motor transport management and combat support signals to specialist driver/operator courses and basic driver training.

The school's launch coincided with the formation of its parent body, the Army Individual Training Organisation (AITO), which will train 85,000 soldiers this year.

Headed by chief executive Maj Gen Christopher Elliott, AITO comprises 34 training organisations providing 1,400 training courses.

No support for Gulf CW reports

REPORTED detections of chemical warfare agents in the Gulf by the Czechoslovak military had been studied by UK authorities, who had found no collateral evidence to support them, Defence minister Earl Howe said in a Lords written answer.

He was responding to a question from the Countess of Mar on Czech military reports of low levels of CW agents detected in the Saudi theatre in the early days of the Gulf War air conflict.

In a subsequent debate, the Countess asked if the strict application of the Official Secrets Act took precedence over disclosure of information which would assist in the diagnosis of health problems reported by Op Granby soldiers.

Earl Howe replied: "... no. It is our practice to release available information which would assist in the treatment of health problems experienced by members of the Armed Forces who served in Operation Granby."

The Countess called for an inquiry into allegations that up to 10,000 medical incidents had been "removed, lost or corrupted" from MoD computers, and that these events related to Gulf War health problems. Earl Howe said mechanisms were in place for the release of all necessary information.

Armed Forces Minister Nicholas Soames said on June 18 that he intends to update MPs on the MoD's continuing work on Gulf health issues. To date 937 serving and ex-serving men and women had come forward for medical assessment, of whom 592 had been seen. A second physician is now helping the evaluations.

Up to 251 members of the Army Reserve and TA are being called out to support operations in Bosnia. Armed Forces Minister Nicholas Soames said in a Commons written reply on June 13 that volunteers were being sought. The majority will replace those called out in February but there is an additional need to fill 55 posts to reinforce Regular units. Those called out will report to a mobilisation centre between July 8 and 12.

Hong Kong dragons bound for Earls Court

ONE OF the highlights at the 1996 Royal Tournament, hosted this year by the Royal Navy at Earls Court from July 9 to 20, will be a display by the Hong Kong Military Service Corps.

As well as a traditional display by four lion dancing teams, performed to the music of the Royal Hong Kong Police Band, the HKMSC's ten-minute act will incorporate two 60ft dragons.

The difference on this occasion is that they will be carried on motor cycles.

In an additional gesture by the organisers to mark the vital contribution the British Garrison has made over the years to the success story of the colony, Hong Kong's governor, Christopher Patten - due to hand over sovereignty next year - has been invited to take the salute at one of the performances.

He will be escorted during his trip by Maj Gen Bryan Dutton, Commander British Forces Hong Kong.

The musical drive by the King's Troop, Royal Horse Artillery - a perennial favourite at the show - will feature as usual, as will the Royal Signals' White Helmets motor-cycle stunt team.

Theme of this year's event is "Power from the Sea".

Details: tel 0171- 244 0244.

IN BRIEF

RMA Sandhurst became a temporary mobilisation centre for 200 TA and Reserve officers and soldiers who volunteered for service in Bosnia. After medicals and issue of kit, they completed a package of training on Salisbury Plain.

A purpose-built tri-Service recruiting centre has opened in Palace Barracks, Holywood. It has links with the Northern Ireland Training and Employment Agency and has been set a target of signing up 900 recruits this year, two-thirds of them for the Army.

Armed Forces Minister Nicholas Soames made his first visit to the Gurkha Training Wing at Queen Elizabeth Barracks, Church Crookham.

Eighteen AS90 self-propelled guns belonging to 1st Regiment, Royal Horse Artillery have been shipped to Bosnia in readiness for the regiment's deployment later this month when 650 soldiers, commanded by Lt Col Colin Tadier, will arrive in theatre.

The Army's largest single UNICOM computer system - with 169 terminals - has gone on-line at the Army Pay and Documentation Office in Northern Ireland. The office handles almost £150 million each year and looks after the financial and administrative needs of 2,000 military and civilian staff at Headquarters Northern Ireland.

British IFOR soldiers in river rescue

TWO soldiers serving with IFOR rescued an elderly Croatian couple trapped in a river.

Cpl Al Elderbrant and LCpl Chris Gunn of South Wales-based H Troop, 14 Signal Regiment (EW) were travelling to their base at Vitez when they spotted the pair stranded on top of their vehicle in a fast-flowing river.

Cpl Elderbrant stopped the recovery vehicle and ambulance from a passing Belgian IFOR convoy and sent the rest of the convoy to get help. He then attached himself to a safety rope which the Belgians anchored to their vehicle.

When a Dutch vehicle arrived another rope was thrown to the car. The trapped man tied it to his vehicle and Cpl Elderbrant pulled himself over while LCpl Gunn took charge on the bank.

With the aid of a ladder provided by Dutch military police, the 15ft gap between car and bank was breached and both victims crawled across the ladder, secured by Cpl Elderbrant, to safety.

History in the making

Maj Gen Bryan Dutton, Commander British Forces Hong Kong, is greeted by Maj Gen Liu Zhenwu, commander of the future PLA garrison, during an historic meeting in Shenzhen, southern China.

It is believed to be the first visit by a British commander of the Territory to China since the Communist take-over in 1949.

Gen Dutton's two-day visit to the in-coming garrison's headquarters at Shenzhen was said to have gone a long way to increasing the familiarisation between the garrisons.

Bosnia unit had hot food but no toilets

LIVING conditions provided for British soldiers deployed in Bosnia have been criticised by the Commons Defence Committee. But the MPs praised British catering as the best in theatre.

The MPs' report* says a unit of 230 men camped on a disused factory site, in temperatures of minus 25C, had not been provided with showers and lavatories for two months.

MPs were told toilet facilities were so inadequate that troops waited until they left camp on patrol before making use of appropriate cover in mine-infested countryside.

"A higher standard should be expected for a peacekeeping mission in a place like Bosnia than would be the norm for a short exercise on Salisbury Plain or a high-intensity conflict in Germany," says the report.

The all-party group concluded that if the UK is to be involved with peacekeeping missions in future, the MoD would have to acquire and maintain a greater quantity and range of combat stores to meet a variety of eventualities.

When the committee visited Bosnia four months into the IFOR deployment about 2,000 soldiers did not have access to welfare telephones, or their access involved a weekly 30-minute bus ride into a town with a single international line.

After initial difficulties experienced by private telephone contractors, 90 per cent of British troops had access to a welfare telephone by May 12.

But the MPs did single out the feeding arrangements for British troops as being better than for any other nation's soldiers. British troops ate three hot meals a day from the outset while US units lived on ration packs for three months.

IFOR's Challenger tanks and heavy artillery had offered a visible expression of military strength and political will, and tanks had ensured a high level of crew protection. "This compares with, for example, the inappropriate deployment of Saxon vehicles to Gorazde by UNPROFOR," say the MPs.

For future operations British forces should be provided with equipment necessary to outperform weapons available to local factions and to cover the possibility of withdrawal in the face of hostile action, they say.

Commenting on their concern at the strain being put on the British Army by operations in Bosnia, the MPs say: "We conclude that in the wide range of post-Cold War scenarios in which the Armed Forces might be needed, either a prolonged peacekeeping mission like IFOR is too large a task for the Army or the Army is too small.

"We believe that British forces in Bosnia are continuing to do an excellent job. The professionalism, adaptability and good humour of the British soldiers in this difficult task is much to be admired. The IFOR deployment has gone very well to date."

Map unit deployed to Kiseljak

THE BRITISH Army's map making unit — 13 Topographic Squadron RE — has been deployed to Bosnia as part of the 60,000-strong NATO Implementation Force.

It is the first time the whole squadron has deployed overseas since 1964.

From its base at Kiseljak the unit provides maps detailing borders, former confrontation lines and minefields to all IFOR troops.

With several million mines laid in the region, demand for accurate geographical details and maps has become critical.

The deployment is the culmination of a three-year period during which the squadron, based at Hermitage near Newbury, changed from a static role to being fully mobile.

Right Royal double

LCpl Jason John of 100 Field Squadron (Militia) offers a toast, in the form of a bottle of Double Royal ale, to the squadron's parent unit, the Royal Monmouthshire Royal Engineers (Militia). A thirst-quenching 12,000 bottles of the special beer have been produced by a Cardiff brewery to help celebrate the unit's unique position in the Army of being the only regiment with two Royals in its title...

Major success

Over the past seven years, Maj Emma Welch has served in Cyprus, the Falklands, southern France, Spain and Portugal. At 26, she is believed to be the youngest major in the Army, and the first with the Royal Artillery.

Now she finds herself under the wing of IFOR at the helm of the Army's press and information centre at Split's Divulje Barracks.

Her younger sister Victoria, with the QARANC, is serving with 22 Field Hospital, which is due to deploy to Bosnia this month.

Flying visit

Defence secretary Michael Portillo meets commanding officer Lt Col Richard Folkes and aircrew from 5 Regiment, Army Air Corps at Aldergrove, before continuing to Londonderry, where he visited units of 8 Infantry Brigade.

Lifesaver Jonathan

When a British tourist had an asthma attack and was having breathing difficulties, Cpl Jonathan Harrison of the RMP detachment in Dhekelia, Cyprus, and his partner, Cpl Crawford, took speedy action.

Having transferred the woman to the back of their patrol car, they were travelling to the nearest clinic under police escort when the woman twice stopped breathing.

On both occasions Cpl Harrison carried out artificial respiration, monitoring the patient until they got her to the clinic.

NEWS ITEM...

Exchanging Great Britain hockey player's cap for film director's hat is Maj Peter Boxell RA (second right), former leading light in the sport, who, with Sgt Steve Dock RLC (far right), has taken over as Land Command's mobile news team. Peter plans to take the team, which replaces Sgt Dave Brown (left) and Maj Tim Purbrick (next to him) to Canada, Poland, the Falklands and back to Bosnia (where the quartet is pictured) during the next few months.

PEOPLE

The guest and the goat

Chelsea Pensioner Dennis Welsh, late Royal Welch Fusiliers and Welch Regiment, took the opportunity to inspect Billy, the 3 RWF's regimental goat (pictured with Goat Major Sgt Norman Pritchard) when he was invited to the opening by the Queen of the new £1.6 million Territorial Army Centre in Aberystwyth, which houses the battalion's Recce Platoon.

SOLO SUCCESS

Happy recipient of this year's Black Horse Solo Award at Bovington is Cpl Andy Craze of the Band of the Royal Lancers, seen with Ian Glover of Lloyds Bank, who, for the second consecutive year, staged the competition in conjunction with the band.

Event organiser Capt Denis Burton said: "The Black Horse award plays a vital part in training as it often provides the first opportunity for new band members to give a solo performance in public."

The Band of the Royal Lancers was formed in 1994.

Caring captain

Once sick parade is over, Capt Simon Hall, medical officer attached to the Queen's Own Hussars currently deployed with IFOR in Bosnia, can be found helping with patients like this one at a health centre in the Moslem town of Kljuc.

With the help of an interpreter, he diagnoses and consults with local medical staff.

"I got involved shortly after arriving here with the QRH," Simon explained. "At one stage there was a large medical team at the clinic dealing with 10,000 people. However, with the violence, the staff has dwindled and the number of patients has risen dramatically as refugees have fled their homes."

Will the real Army community please stand up

POLLY Toynbee writes and broadcasts on social affairs. She is well known for her outspoken nature.

Her attention has been caught by the number of television programmes featuring the military.

She argues that they are cheap to make and easier than trying to research and make proper documentaries.

Main focus of her fire appears to be "the archaic class system still played out between officers and men, at a time when most decent companies have eliminated such stereotypes..."

The slick answer is that the Army isn't a business and cannot be run like one. The problem, as I see it, is that Polly Toynbee can't be the only one who misreads the subtle messages which come over in these "fly-on-the-wall" glimpses of military life.

When I first worked with the Army many years ago, the system was archaic. A married woman was not allowed to sign forms - whether to march into a quarter or buy a washing machine. She really was "wife of" for all purposes.

Twenty years later the system has evolved. There are advice centres on every corner and support organisations for everyone. It is no longer acceptable to refer exclusively to Army wives. There is a small but growing band of Army husbands and Army couples.

These days we can actually discuss the great taboos. Silver-haired policy-makers have been able to talk about pregnant Servicewomen, single parents and homosexuality without being dubbed trouble-makers.

Polly Toynbee says the Army "is now a curiosity, a world apart". She says the British public is unlikely to meet a real-life soldier.

We know she

is right in the sense that all three Services are invisible on a day-to-day basis. All the public has to go on are television images... such as the current documentary Flying Soldiers and the popular drama series Soldier, Soldier. Of the two genres, I prefer the latter.

Roving camera and energetic producer catch soldiers at times when they ought to be left alone. This is the key to entertaining TV from the programme-maker's point of view.

'A languid subaltern draped over his bunk reflecting on life for the benefit of a winsome producer confirms the civilian viewer's worst fears'

A languid subaltern draped over his bunk reflecting on life for the benefit of a winsome producer confirms the very worst fears of civilian viewers.

At least the structure of a drama allows time for balance.

It is easy to understand the attraction of allowing cameras into the daily lives of Service personnel. You hope they will come across as real people.

Unfortunately, the stereotypes persist. Civilians expect RSMs to shout and officers to clink glasses over silver-laden tables.

It doesn't matter how much footage is given to youngsters getting fit and passing (or failing) courses; one glimpse of a Hooray Henry, or the lonely soldier's wife, is the image that sticks.

I live on the edge of a training area and soldiers in uniform are often in our village. It is interesting to watch the reaction from local people... smiles and greetings and a sense of trust in strangers just because they are in uniform.

There is a concentration of US Air Force personnel in the village, living out their lives quietly and respectfully, helping their neighbours and getting involved in the community's activities. They are outgoing and fun, wish you a good morning and ask you how ya doin'.

This is where the real PR work is done. A few cartons of ice cream for a school party goes a lot further than thousands of pounds on a publicity drive.

Soldiers and their families raise money for charity, build playgrounds and help at local events all over the UK and abroad. They are the ones who should feature in TV documentaries. But they don't.

Next time someone wants to do a fly-on-the-wall, the MoD should agree only if the filmmakers look at the real lives of Service families within the wider community.

It would help, of course, if we saw more soldiers in uniform... driving to work, shopping in the supermarket, walking with their wives and sweethearts.

It might take a while, though, before we see them beaming at us, asking us how we are doing and urging us to have a nice day.

Two thought-provoking new studies - Changing Step by Ruth Jolly and Breaking Ranks by Chris Jessup - explore contemporary problems faced by Servicemen and women, and their families, during and after their military careers. Both are published by Brassey's in hardback, price £20 each.

How we cope with trauma of change

MICHAEL C was absorbed in a busy job at HQ BAOR when he heard he was being considered for redundancy in 1990.

"He felt sick and angry and humiliated," said his wife. "There were days when he frantically made decisions for our future which we had to reverse, and other days when he couldn't get himself into gear for anything."

The family flew home from Germany in a state of shock; assured of money, advice and time to plan, but with their whole lives suspended in midstream.

Michael's traumatic experience is described in Ruth Jolly's Changing Step, sub-titled From military to civilian life: people in transition.

Her book is based on in-depth interviews with 62 people, ten of them former officers, another ten former other ranks from all three Services. They ranged in age from 24 to 59, and had served from three to 36 years.

The author explores "conventional wisdoms" (young men adjust to civvy street more easily than veterans; those who take a trade into civvy street have an advantage; an actively supportive family makes a vital contribution to the process of change) and found similar themes running through story after story.

"They show that, faced with the reality of a major life change, people have three options: they may make a conscious effort to alter their self-image in accordance with the new circumstances, or they may make a similar conscious decision to resist any changes to their image, ignoring the new circumstances.

"Or they may take a 'damage limitation' path. This involves a gradual acceptance of small differences while preserving continuity - at times an artificial continuity - with the past in as many ways as possible," writes Ruth Jolly.

All went through three stages, starting with confrontation, often in a state of shock, moving to disengagement from the Army (always a muddled process), and into resocialisation, the final phase of "changing step" under which a new social identity is assumed.

In seeking to discover why her interviewees joined up, the parental and family influences that shaped them, and their struggles to adapt, Ruth Jolly has written a book that will confront and, possibly, explain many of the inner traumas faced by those about to leave the Armed Forces.

Here are a few of her observations and conclusions:

Red herring: it is easier/more difficult to adjust if the new occupation is allied to the military. Jolly's conclusion: the size of the step away from the military is beside the point. What is crucial is the sincerity and power of the individual's attachment to it.

Fact: Most, but not all, subjects who had adapted well had had a generally satisfactory military career and had left more or less of their own accord. The desire to reach a new goal in civilian life was clearly crucial...

Unfinished business syndrome: "When an individual has to confront the reality that his or her career in the military is going to end, the amount of disquiet this engenders does seem to depend upon that person's level of contentment with his or her achievements so far."

Family strengths: "Families who survive the peculiar pressures of Service life tend to be extraordinarily close and strong. But paradoxically, it is in some circumstances those very pressures that have helped to make them so. Take them away and family solidarity may threaten to crumble. A sobering thought."

"A caring family is the best backup that any leaver can have. But it must not be forgotten that all the members of the family are leavers too, and all of them both need, and can give, support." - JNE

FAMILIES of the 1st Battalion, The Royal Regiment of Wales will be the first to benefit from refurbished flats in Pimlico, Central London, when the battalion moves into Cavalry Barracks at Hounslow.

The flats, in four blocks near the House of Commons, have received a £6.6 million facelift over the past four years. They were built in 1927.

Structural changes have produced more space, each block of five floors has its own lift and there are landscaped play areas.

Maj Steve Tuck, HQ London District, who lived in the flats 20 years ago as a young Grenadier Guardsman, was impressed with the work. "The difference from when I lived there is striking. There's so much more space."

It is the first completed project to be taken over by the Defence Housing Executive. Among those present for the hand-over ceremony were Lt Col (Retd) Rod Milsom, the project sponsor from HQ Land Command, DHE representative Peter Preston, and Maj (Retd) Bill Matthews, Army welfare support officer for the area.

Biggest franchise show in Britain

MORE than 160 expanding companies have already booked stands at the National Franchise Exhibition at the NEC, Birmingham in the autumn.

Visitors will have an unprecedented choice of companies to meet, including big-name franchises such as McDonalds Restaurants, Greenalls Inns, Dyno-Rod, Red Star Parcels and BP Oil.

All the major high street banks and the main sponsors, the British Franchise Association, will be running free seminars at the NEC covering every aspect of franchising. Visitors will be able to get free and impartial advice from specialist lawyers, consultants, accountants and banks.

Exhibitors will be seeking franchisees and offer investments from under £5,000 to over £500,000.

New launches at the NEC will include a paint repair system, sandwich restaurants, security branding, supply and maintenance of indoor tropical plants, car hire and soft furnishings.

The exhibition will be open from October 4-6, with tickets costing £10 on the door or £8 (£14 a pair) in advance. You can register in advance on the Franchise Hotline 01203 426461.

Shapes of things to come

THERE was clearly something different about the new Warrior reconnaissance vehicle making its show debut at the Battlefield Systems International (BSI) exhibition at Chertsey, but few people were able to say precisely what, writes Laurie Manton.

Manufacturers GKN Defence had to provide the explanation: that the vehicle had five wheel stations instead of the normal six, and was nearly a metre shorter than previous variants.

Designed for a close reconnaissance role, it requires only three crew – commander, driver and gunner – with an additional seat in the rear for a crew member to operate surveillance equipment.

The recce vehicle on display at BSI, like GKN's Desert Warrior variant, is fitted with a Hughes Delco Systems turret, equipped with a stabilised Bushmaster 25mm cannon, co-axial 7.62mm machine gun and optional TOW anti-tank missile launchers fitted either side of the turret.

It boasts a fully-integrated battlefield management system for tactical reconnaissance – IBIS – which incorporates advanced digital and electronic technology, combining turret and command and control functions at all levels of an all-arms battle group.

Reflective

Other innovative defence concepts on display included Flectalon thermal camouflage for personnel and the METSMAN meteorological sensor. The thermal camouflage system is the result of a collaboration between Ultra Electronics Weapon Systems and Flectalon, who manufacture an infra-red reflective fibre of the same name.

The Flectalon material traps pockets of air to reduce heat loss and also reflects infra-red heat in the bands used by infra-red imaging equipment, making troops and their vehicles, equipment and observation posts thermally invisible by day and night.

Successful trials have been carried out by the Army's Surveillance, Target Acquisition, Night Observation and Counter-surveillance establishment and are currently under way with specialist units with a requirement for avoiding IR surveillance.

The accuracy of the opening salvos in a large calibre direct-fire battle may well determine the outcome of an engagement. First-round hit performance is critically important, and that is where METSMAN earns its keep.

Under the most hostile conditions, the precision of gunnery can be dramatically improved with the METSMAN meteorological sensor which, according to maker Integrated Photomatrix Limited, offers levels of accuracy and reliability never before achieved.

The sensor monitors environmental factors that affect the trajectory of projectiles – wind speed and direction – and provides constant updates to fire-control computers. It is already standard equipment in the Challenger 2 main battle tank.

It is also being trialled for use with NBC support and reconnaissance vehicles.

Evaluation for use with battlefield sound-ranging and triangulation equipment is underway. In this mode it will be used to detect wind speed and direction, enabling any drift in the sound to be calculated.

LIONHEARTED LES

CHAR WALLAH...
Les has fond memories of Naafi tea

I WAS recently accorded the distinct honour of being personally escorted around that spartan, sprawling cantonment known to most intelligent deserters as Aldershot.

As I gazed with growing pride at the myriads of khaki-clad gallants milling about outside the MO's office, I confess that so great was my emotion I had recourse to swallow deeply from a hip flask. I always carry an ample quantity of alcohol on my person in case I should sustain a severe snake bite. I also carry along a snake...

Tears welled unbidden to my eyes as I strove to find the courage necessary to quaff a mouthful of Army tea – a liquid that is quite capable of stripping the outer layers of copper from a lavatory cistern or dissolving the small intestine of a musk ox.

A rather spotty officer, and he was spotty, I'm afraid – in fact he blew his nose on a braille handkerchief – gave me a sandwich that was so old it was probably prepared in Kitchener's bivouac. I was curtly informed by a rather vague "brass hat" that the cutback on military spending was so acute that the new weapons were coming from Airfix.

WHITE FEATHERS

I was saddened at the thought of a diminished Army. I still recall my days as a trooper with The Queen's Bays, 2nd Dragoon Guards, with nostalgic relish. Despite what it says in my Army discharge book, I am not an alarmist, although I must admit there is a germ of truth in the rumour that I tried to surrender to the Germans in 1953. I still discuss my role in keeping the peace in Europe just after the war and I've still got all my white feathers. We Dawsons are of warrior stock – in fact the first Dawson, Albert, was a direct descendant of Elric the Peculiar, the only Viking ever to get mugged in Gateshead. My great-grandfather fought with Wellington – they couldn't trust him with a gun. At the Charge of the Light Brigade, my great-uncle rode into the valley of death – the only trouble was, he rode side-saddle.

My father cancelled a holiday in Jersey because he heard about the Battle of the Flowers... What a supreme coward he was – he was in Dunkirk when the first shot was fired and under a commode in Crewe when the second one went off. When war was declared in 1939, he was the only man I know who went to night school to learn how to live without a trigger finger.

Perhaps the one member of the Dawsons who saves our pride was Beauregard Dawson, who was a bugler with General Custer and stood by his side at the massacre of The Little Big Horn. As the Indians closed in for the kill, Custer trumpeted: "I shall wear my scarlet trousers so that the Redskins won't see my blood." Beauregard said in reply: "I think I'll wear my khaki ones."

My Army career was not an illustrious one. My uniform was so ill-fitting I became a model for a burst frankfurter. Whenever I fired off a rifle, the bang caused me to leap into a thicket like a startled fawn. I found cleanliness most irksome.

I'm not saying that I came from a dirty family, but the safest place to keep money in our house was under the soap.

When my National Service was near the end, the Korean War broke out and Clement Attlee, for some absurd reason, put six months extra on my time. I screamed and drummed my heels but I still had to do it – and I have never voted for a Labour government since. I think the Army did me the world of good though... Before my enlistment, beer made me ill; now, thanks to the character-building I endured at Catterick Camp, the thinking man's Belsen, I'm only ill when I'm not drinking beer.

So here I sit on the verandah of my highly acclaimed Wimpey-syle Mandalay bungalow, sipping a mint julep and listening to the wife playing her records of Hitler's speeches, and I look back on my military service with a sort of tenderness. And that's one thing about me, I'm intensely patriotic, as well as a bloody liar.

Should this barren rock of ours, so heavily drenched in history, ever be threatened by a force of arms again, then by the Lord Harry I'll be the first to go and demand a sick note.

They can keep their atomic warheads. Nuclear fission? I throw back my head and howl in derision. In the final analysis, it is the common soldier who gets the Black Market going. I must close now, the old wound throbs – the one I received in the face of Naafi prices. My dear mother-in-law has arrived home from her job on the Wall of Death and I have to scrape the cinders off her jackboots. I close with the words of General Wolfe: 'A friend in need... is a pest.'

Red Stripe isn't just a beer

AS 120 paratroopers from B Company, 3rd Battalion, The Parachute Regiment have discovered, Red Stripe isn't just the local Jamaican beer.

It also meant four weeks in the dense jungle of north eastern Jamaica learning jungle warfare skills from survival, through contact drills and on to a final six-day company-level exercise.

Running alongside the jungle programme in Exercise Red Stripe was the adventurous training package of diving taught by Sgt Kev Malcolm, free-fall parachuting and sailing in the Jamaican Defence Force's yacht. Finally there were three days R and R to let the company have a taste of local life in top resorts such as Montego Bay.

"We have a lot of young soldiers here and for them this will all be quite new," said company commander Maj John Barrett. "They will have some good training and see what Jamaica has to offer, which is a great deal."

For the soldiers it was a big change from coping with the temperatures of minus 40C they experienced in Norway during Exercise Hardfall in February.

On patrol in the jungle the day-time temperature was as high as 30C. In July B Coy will join the rest of 3 Para on Exercise Pond Jump West in Canada.

Cavalrymen go back to basics

INSTEAD of making tracks on Salisbury Plain, tank crews from 1st The Queen's Dragoon Guards have been hiding in ruts left behind by the Royal Tank Regiment.

Cavalrymen had been transformed into riflemen with the 1st Battalion, The Royal Green Jackets, experiencing a dramatic change of perspective.

Without their tanks they were no longer invulnerable to small arms fire and had to find cover where they could, crawling from one clump of grass to another fold in the ground, anxiously trying to avoid being shot.

The Queen's Dragoon Guards were taking part in a Tactical Equipment Simulation Exercise (TESEX) using second-generation lasers as part of their training to support the under-manned 1 RGJ when it deploys to Bosnia in August.

It was an exercise bristling with friendly regimental rivalries and challenging situations.

Based at Kiwi Barracks, Bulford, 1 RGJ was opposed by its cousins in a 2 RGJ company from Holywood, plus a troop of Challengers from Tidworth-based 1 RTR.

After a week of company training, a second week was devoted to three separate missions: clearing four houses in Imber, securing a bridge, and defending a mine-field gap. Each task involved a free-play exercise with a company pitted against a platoon supported on two occasions by Challenger.

During the long marches with full kit, through mud and rain, many a cavalryman must have wondered what had gone wrong.

But when he closed with the enemy, Cpl

(... and you don't get much more basic than a tank rut on the Plain)

Rfn Matt Bennett keeps a low profile as aials are removed from a Recce Platoon Sabre

Mark Waterall found fighting in built-up areas "on the ball", even though he was trained as a tank commander and would normally have avoided such areas at all costs.

"In tanks we have 62 tons of armour round us so there is no worry about small arms fire ..."

Several QDG drivers commented on the difference in cross-country performance between wheels and tracks.

Wheels have less grip on mud, which was a matter of concern for drivers and passengers, said Cpl Waterall.

This was the latest in a series of exciting and challenging experiences which the dragoons have faced in recent years.

"TESEX on tanks in BATUS (Canada) last year was an eye-opener," said Cpl Waterall. "You understand where you are going wrong and learn how you need to improve your personal skills as a vehicle commander."

The QDG went through a Northern Ireland tour as infantry and completed an outstanding gunnery course in Hohne where 61 out of 63 recruits passed out. There were mixed feelings when the firing camp was cut short because the squadron had been looking forward to returning to BATUS.

Instead it will be deploying to Bosnia. But the Queen's Dragoon Guards know they will be better cavalrymen for the dismounted experience. Understanding how foot soldiers work will help them anticipate infantry reactions during mixed exercises in the future.

Dragoons had started as mounted infantry, said WO2 Chris Gibbons, QDG squadron sergeant major, so history was repeating itself and they were returning to their roots.

The cavalrymen know about casualties. On the same day as ancestors of the Royal Green Jackets (the 52nd) were destroying Napoleon's Imperial Guard at Waterloo, the King's Dragoon Guards were breaking through the French lines with the Heavy Brigade, losing so many men that the remaining sergeants invited surviving officers to dine with them.

But it was a salutary lesson for modern cavalrymen to come up against the high cost of fighting in built-up areas.

"I warned them to expect heavy casualties while clearing buildings," said Cpl Tony Cox, one of two RGJ corporals detached to each of the QDG Troops.

"They were still taken aback but battled on and it was good to see them putting everything into practice. There was a lot of tactics work in FIBUA they had never touched before but they were enthusiastic and picked it up quickly."

The QDG battle group first discovered that TESEX was a superb training tool last year in Canada, said B Sqn commander Maj Dave Norris.

"Many of the principles are the same for infantry as for cavalry," he said.

"How you use the ground in a tank is much the same as the way you use it as infantry ... you are always looking for that dead area in which you can move."

Both cavalry and infantry approached joint training positively, said WO2 Gibbons. "The RGJ particularly enjoyed it because they got us out of our vehicles and made us work hard. We picked up a lot of information from them."

Challenger drivers had been on a week's course to acquaint themselves with Saxon. It took longer to familiarise the 1 RGJ reconnaissance platoon with Sabre and its quicker movement and different tactical approach.

Rfn Matt Bennet and other members of the platoon spent three months learning tactics and formations, and tricks such as removing antennae when approaching the crest of a hill.

"The sighting system is pretty good and the aials are the only things giving us away," he said.

As well as the interaction between RGJ and QDG, there was terrific rivalry between 1 and 2 RGJ to see who could "kill" the greatest number of the other battalion, said WO1 Paul Harding, 1 RGJ's RSM.

Rivalry between 1 and 2 RGJ was not the only spice to the exercise. Sgt Rab Livingstone of 6 Tp, D Sqn, 1 RTR had no sympathy for the dismounted cavalry of the QDG.

He supplied one Challenger to defend the bridge and two to attack the minefield, and because they were doing the same attack three times while the infantry changed on each occasion, the armour was totally in command by the final exercise.

"We started the attack at 2100 and had massacred them by 2230. But they called in reinforcements and we had to fight them until 0630," he said.

"We still had one tank left at the end, but it had used up all its ammunition destroying the infantry."

Sgt Ginge Owen and 10 Platoon of C Company used stealth to capture one of the Challengers during a recce patrol. It was used against the attackers.

Greenjacket cavalry Bosnia-bound

A UNIQUE formation will deploy to the Balkans in August with the 1st Battalion, The Royal Green Jackets.

B Squadron, 1 RGJ will have a squadron headquarters from the 1st The Queen's Dragoon Guards plus One and Two Troops from B Squadron, as well as 3 Platoon from the Royal Green Jackets.

Lt Col Jolyon Jackson, commanding officer 1 RGJ, believes it will be the first time a tank regiment has deployed as mechanised infantry equipped with Saxons instead of Challengers.

He was impressed by the professional approach of the cavalry to their pre-Bosnia training as infantry and knew they would be a fully-trained, integrated and effective part of the battle group by the time they deployed.

"The QDG have been surprised at how tough the infantry job is and there have been occasions in the rain and mud when they have missed their tanks," he said.

"They are enjoying the changes and challenges and will enjoy returning to their tanks next year, having earned their medals the hard way."

Having recently returned from a tour as resident battalion in Cyprus, the Greenjackets found the Tactical Equipment Simulation exercise on Salisbury Plain an exciting experience, particularly as it was the first time in five years that the battalion had operated at the high-intensity level.

"It is marvellous being part of a vibrant field army formation in a brigade with a real role," said Col Jackson.

Initial "war-fighting" training was designed so that the battalion would be able to operate with 1 Mechanised Brigade in whatever situation may develop in

Rise and fall of Maj Bedford

Maj Simon Bedford, OC A Company, 1st Battalion, The Royal Green Jackets, had been at his unit's forming up point for only five minutes when he was shot.

His company was "shaking out" before attacking an enemy strongpoint when an enemy sniper found his target. Fortunately, it was not a 7.62 round which took him out, but a second-generation laser beam which activated one of the sensors on Maj Bedford's Direct Fire Weapons Effect Simulation equipment.

"A commander waves his arms about and tends to have a group of people round him and is easy for a sniper to pick out. Sadly I went down first," he said.

"I have to be as aware of my own movements and field craft as much as anybody else, so I won't be making that mistake again."

BASIC FIELD CRAFT

"You really have to crawl around and observe basic fieldcraft skills which we have always been taught but to which we perhaps only paid lip service."

"Commanders cannot afford to do that now."

Not just field craft skills were tested, but the ability to maintain control. It was likely that a rifleman would end up commanding a section of eight soldiers and might even find himself leading a platoon.

"It is not something you believe until it happens, but when you find your corporal, sergeant and officer are no longer with you, then it really hits home," said Maj Bedford.

Despite ending the battle with only 37 unscathed out of 113, Maj Bedford found it gratifying to see how his rifleman reacted. "It was purely through the psychological and physical momentum that the company managed to achieve its mission," he said.

Bosnia. This was followed by specific pre-Bosnia training, first for the commanders, then the whole battlegroup.

Maj David Norris, officer commanding B Sqn QDG, is confident his troopers will be as adaptable as he had been. Now on his second appointment as a squadron commander, he previously commanded a medium recce squadron with CVRT and is destined to be a mechanised company commander.

"It is a challenge, but the regiment is used to change," he said.

While the squadron is operating in Saxons in Bosnia, the remainder of the QDG, commanded by Lt Col Hamish MacDonald, will deploy with Challenger.

Maj Norris thinks he will have the best of it. "All the reports I have heard indicate that there are more jobs for the infantry to do, especially in Saxon because it is a less aggressive way of going about the business and is possibly more accepted by the local population than turning up in a tank," he said.

Col Jackson said: "We are confident we will be able to step down from our high-intensity conflict role to peacekeeping and face any eventuality."

"There is so much work to be done in confidence building and helping the civilian population, but we will be there over the election period and who knows what could happen then?"

It takes a would-be combat engineer 11 weeks of concentrated effort at 3 Royal School of Military Engineering Regiment, Gibraltar Barracks, Minley to learn the skills of this special trade

SAPPERS arrive at Minley having completed ten weeks of basic training at the Army Training Regiment, Basingstoke and leave as fully-fledged combat engineers ready for service in theatres such as former Yugoslavia, the Falkland Islands, Cyprus and Africa.

All of the skills taught have relevance to recent humanitarian and operational work undertaken by the Royal Engineers: mine clearance and the construction of field defences in the Balkans; infrastructure support such as supplying bulk drinking water in Angola; bridge construction in Rwanda; construction and maintenance work elsewhere in Africa. The list is long.

Training at 3 RSME Regiment is extremely diverse. One day a student may be learning how to handle and use plastic explosive, the next he may be instructed on the detection and clearance of mines.

Bridge-building, watermanship, mine warfare, route maintenance... all become bread-and-butter to the trained combat engineer.

The hands-on approach to teaching is illustrated by the motto the school adopts:

"Tell me and I will forget.

Show me and I will remember.

Let me do it and I will understand."

In addition to learning combat engineer skills, students continue a full and active physical education programme. The "seamless" transition develops the Phase 1 standard reached at ATR Basingstoke to Phase 2 training.

The underlying ethos behind training is that troop and section commanders are preparing students to deploy on operations at the end of their courses to help the Royal Engineers carry out their tasks worldwide.

two trucks bounced across parts of the Kenyan bush where roads were a distant memory.

Four hours south-west of Nairobi, this was "Born Free" country in the raw.

But the people in the vehicles were not looking for lions . . . they were scouring the bush for members of the nomadic Masai tribe.

Members of 24 Airmobile Field Ambulance from Catterick in North Yorkshire were helping the Kenyan Government to deliver its vaccination programme to people in the remotest areas of the country.

Middle of nowhere

On good days, the RAMC unit arrived at a medical centre and worked under shelter of a roof. On many others the guide halted the small convoy in the middle of nowhere and the doctors held their clinic under a convenient tree.

As the medics travelled through the hot bush, surgical masks were pressed into service as dust filters.

Working closely with two major aid agencies, 24 Fd Amb, beefed up by Territorial Army doctors and nurses, was taking medicine to the people under Exercise Sharp Point, commanded by Maj Alan Rees. Personnel from 15 units were assembled to help with the mission.

Capt David Collie, 2iC and motor transport officer, completed the initial recce to found wanting. When two soldiers based at the unit's most northerly location were required back in the United Kingdom as soon as possible, they were on home soil within 48 hours.

By the end of Sharp Point, the British medics, working in three field teams, had notched up 1,200 vaccinations and 1,050 cases of primary care treatment.

Main category of patients to benefit were the children of Kenya's nomadic tribes. The team also dispensed health advice and carried out some dental work.

"It was a great opportunity for us to assist in the vaccination programme being carried out by the Kenyan Government and to practise our medical skills in a difficult and challenging environment," said Maj Rees. Vaccines, supplied by the government, were aimed at preventing tuberculosis, polio, measles, diphtheria, whooping cough and tetanus.

In their primary care role, the medics provided ante-natal advice, tackled eye problems including trachoma, cataracts and conjunctivitis, and came across pneumonia and malaria cases.

Maj Sarah Frankland ran a dental clinic, making 70 extractions and seven surgical extractions, as well as many fillings and hygiene treatments.

Capt Bob Darby, a qualified nurse and Regular soldier, described the conditions he found at a medical centre near the Tanzanian border as "a big culture shock". He normally serves as training officer with the London-based 256 Field Hospital, a TA unit.

Pte Glen Tilbury, a radio operator and driver, provided field communications for the exercise, and SSgt Jon Floyd, a master chef with the RLC, was in charge of making sure the 50 soldiers on Sharp Point were properly fed.

He was suitably pleased when a tribesman presented him with a goat for a unit barbecue.

The Queen talks to Peter Archer about his painting

ARMY padres celebrated the 200th anniversary of the Royal Army Chaplains' Department when they assembled in Westminster Abbey for a service of thanksgiving, writes Gordon Skilling.

Focal point of the service was an act of rededication during which the royal warrant of the department was carried through the Abbey first by the Very Rev Ivan Neill, oldest surviving Chaplain General, then by the Rev Tim Cole, one of the newest recruits.

Representatives of the main denominations led prayers for a congregation which contained delegates from Army churches throughout the country.

An outstanding address by Dr George Carey, Archbishop of Canterbury, did justice to the glittering occasion and the august assembly he faced.

It sparkled with the irreverent comments of Wellington to the Foreign Office bureaucrats and accountants while he was fighting a war; it praised the gallant and dedicated service of chaplains typified by the four Victoria Crosses awarded during the First World War and after which the department earned the title "Royal".

Although pastoral support for regimental soldiers was a common feature in Britain for centuries it was not until 1796 that a royal warrant was issued to regularize and establish the department.

The Archbishop spoke eloquently of how soldiers had drawn strength from their chaplains in the most trying of circumstances in places such as the First World

Soldiers of God mark anniversary

War trenches, the beaches of Normandy and the hills of Korea.

Many chaplains had applied to work with Wellington during the Peninsular war; only one was considered as having the physical stamina to do the key tasks, one of which, said Dr Carey with an apology to the Methodist brethren, was to monitor the growth of Methodism so that they could warn him if there was anything "which ought to be put a stop to".

The Chaplain General, the Rev Dr Victor Dobbin, tells the Queen about the commemorative pill box with which she was presented Chaplains had to take on the whole armour of God and take their share of hardship like good soldiers of Christ Jesus.

The example of Theodore Hardy was not unique. He became a temporary chaplain in 1916 aged 54, winning first a DSO then an MC then the VC.

In the Second World War six chaplains received the DSO and 94 the MC, two being awarded two bars to their Military Crosses. Some of those who could testify to this bravery were present at the service and at a garden party the following day.

The Queen, as the chaplains' patron, also attended the party at the temporal home of the department at Bagshot Park, where the Chaplain General, the Rev Dr Victor Dobbin, presented many of the department's personalities.

The Queen had first view of an oil painting by Peter Archer depicting a communion service in the field during the Cold War somewhere in Germany, with a small group of soldiers taking the sacrament beside their Chieftain tank. Relaxed and obviously enjoying her visit, the Queen was delighted to be presented with an enamelled pill box displaying the badges of Christian and Jewish chaplains and commemorating the chaplains' association with her as Patron and with Bagshot Park.

Commemorative services will also be held in the autumn at Lisburn, St Giles's in Edinburgh, and the cathedral in Brecon.

● The Ven Peter Mallett, who died while preparing to attend the Westminster service, was a popular former Chaplain General who saw active service in Malaya, Aden and Northern Ireland. His riveting services once featured a live tiger.

Irony in making competent Gurkhas redundant

IN your issue of June 10 under the heading of "Terriers deployed to Split and Sarajevo" you published a picture purporting to depict Territorial Army capbadges in Bosnia.

While the British Army has certainly treated the Brigade of Gurkhas as if it were the TA, with Options for Change (what options?) imposing a 70 per cent cut in the number of Gurkhas as compared with 28 per cent for the British, Gurkha regiments are now and always have been part of the Regular force.

The 3rd Battalion, The Royal Gurkha Rifles is a Regular battalion stationed in the United Kingdom.

It is perhaps ironic that at a time when the British Army appears to be having problems finding recruits, I am making perfectly competent Gurkha soldiers compulsorily redundant. With that peculiar British penchant for toadying to our enemies and betraying our friends, 3 RGR is to be disbanded later this year. — Maj J G H Corrigan, OC The Gurkha Training Wing, Queen Elizabeth Barracks, Church Crookham.

Mystery of bugle unearthed on Glosters' Hill 235

POINTS IN QUESTION

Q: Why was War Department property marked with an arrow and what has replaced it?

THE Broad Arrow has been used at various times from 1553 until, I believe, the present day. In about 1687 it marked the boundaries of His Majesty's Tower Ground.

It was legalised in the Navy in 1689 for Board of Ordnance Stores. On July 28, 1806 the Board directed that all descriptions of Ordnance Stores should be so marked. These included clothes supplied by the Board for penal settlements to make convicts easily identifiable in case of escape. — John McKenzie, Selby, N Yorks.

Q: Why do the names of British Army main battle tanks start with a C?

IN 1941-41 we had a number of light tanks such as Covenanter and Cromwells. We always believed they were so named because their design was based on the US Christie Cruiser. — Capt George Lewis, Milford Haven, Dyfed.

DURING my recent visit to Korea (reported in Soldier, May 27), a colleague who had served with the 1st Battalion, The Gloucestershire Regiment in 1951 had an interesting story to tell.

Soon after the Imjin River battle, the re-formed Glosters visited Hill 235, site of the battalion's final stand. The story of the defiant sounding of Last Reveille by Drum Major Buss is well known, after which the bugle was seemingly demolished with a grenade to prevent its use by the enemy.

Searching the shattered weapon pits and trenches, my colleague unearthed a battered bugle, which is still in his possession today, bearing evidence of manufacture by R J Ward and Sons, Liverpool 1923, and the inscriptions 2 GR and 16.

That it is not the bugle of Last Reveille fame has been established beyond reasonable doubt. The bugles taken to Korea by 1 Glosters were of Canadian manufacture.

My colleague and I wonder if readers can throw light on how the bugle came to be on Hill 235 in the summer of 1951. Was it the prized personal possession of one of the men taken prisoner during the battle?

If it has any historical significance, should it be suitably displayed?

The poor quality photograph of bugle and finder [reproduced above] was taken in about 1951. — Jim Jacobs, Fareham, Hants.

Post-Turkish delight

I HAVE just returned from holiday in Turkey to find two issues of Soldier awaiting me. Both are a delight to read, especially the brilliant interview with John Prebble by Gordon Skilling (May 13).

The new cover presentation is fantastic and has improved the look of the magazine 100 per cent. It just goes from strength to strength in every respect.

I am putting together a history of the British Army since 1645 and really could not be without Soldier for information on the whereabouts of personnel and regiments and the promotions listings. Thanks a lot. — Wesley E Knight (ex-NCO, 1 Para), Leicester.

Cadets wear '37 pattern webbing

ANYONE got any Blanco? I was intrigued by the letter from Sean Johnson (April 29) in which he pleaded for his REME volunteer unit to have the chance to acquire up-to-date kit.

Oh, for some '58 pattern webbing — the cadet forces are still on '37 pattern!

We have been promised ten whole sets of '58 pattern, to share among 270 cadets, since before 1992. Presumably when the Regular Army is issued with inter-galactic space-age webbing, our cadet forces will be just about due an issue of PLCE.

While concurring with Mr Johnson's sentiments, he failed to ask the fundamental question: who supplies the surplus stores?

The answer is that most kit and equipment is supplied from the Ministry of Defence by public auction. It is a crying shame that reserves and cadets are once again treated as "second-class", having to resort to purchasing "basic issued items".

If the MoD insists we pay for it, could we not, as Mr Johnson suggests, cut out the middle man and thus achieve a more competitive price? — A R Penfold, Sevenoaks, Kent.

Terror in Canal Zone

DORIS GOLDER, Walter Bentham and Brian Sinclair-Whitely are to be congratulated on their accounts of life and actions in the Suez Canal Zone when terrorists were operating (Letters, Mar 4, April 15, May 13).

Even the sceptics who wondered what the palaver was all about with the continuing correspondence on that "missing medal" must now realise there is substance in the claim.

It is a sorry state of affairs if "politics" or "procedure" still prevent its award and those concerned in the denial should surely question their reasoning. — W H D Podd (ex-4th RTR), Oulton Broad, Suffolk.

CONGRATULATIONS to Pte Gwillam Jenkins, regimental goat of 1 RRW on being presented with the General Service Medal for Northern Ireland (Soldier, April 29).

One can now assume that all the police dogs who saw service in that theatre will also be awarded the GSM.

Perhaps one day all the thousands of Service personnel who saw active service during the 1951-54 emergency in the Suez Canal Zone will get their medal, too. — Harry Whitehead (former CSM, 19 Armd Wksp REME), York.

REGARDING Leon Clarke's letter (May 11) on the subject of a medal for the Suez Emergency, how did he get on at the RBL conference in Scarborough? I wish he would tell us as a lot of us around here are waiting with bated breath. — Len Oliver, Colchester.

For the record ...

King's Corporal

CPL Cosgrove (Letters, May 27) wasn't a "King's Corporal", but he was properly dressed.

After the Middlesex Yeomanry Cavalry (Uxbridge) had been re-titled Middlesex (Duke of Cambridge's Hussars) Yeomanry Cavalry in 1884 they provided an escort for Queen Victoria.

As a mark of distinction their full-rank NCOs were granted the privilege of wearing a crown above their chevrons. SQMSs wore four chevrons with the crown.

On re-forming and transferring to Royal Signals in 1921, the dress distinction continued, as it did when they were embodied as 1st Armd Div Signals in 1939. — Alan R N Simcock, Dorset.

IN 1922 the Middlesex Yeomanry was absorbed into the Royal Signals but retained its own cap-badges, buttons and NCOs' arm badges. The NCOs' arm badge of the MY was the Imperial Crown in gilding metal, worn by corporals and sergeants above their stripes. — A Osborne, Manchester.

THE King's Corporal chestnut needs to be laid to rest. Household Cavalry NCOs have worn a crown above chevrons with their Service dress and other orders of dress from pre-1914; Middlesex Yeomanry NCOs likewise from the last century, granted as an honour for escort duty and smart turnout. — Edward A G Croucher, Diss, Norfolk.

DURING 30 years as honorary secretary of the Military Historical Society I encountered the mythical King's Corporal several times and compiled a formidable file on the subject. Mr L A Griffith (May 27) met a run-of-the-mill corporal of the Middlesex Yeomanry who doubtless amused himself by attributing his regiment's customary rank-marking to the King's Corporal story. — John Gaylor, Bromley, Kent.

● Mr E Osborne, of Surbiton, Surrey, a Soldier reader since it started, notes that the MY rank-marking distinction is detailed in Brian Leigh-Davis's book, British Army Uniforms and Insignia of World War Two, and asks whether WOs wore the badge, which would lead to an SSM wearing two crowns on his sleeve. Mr Alec Coleman, of Bury, Lancs, has also written in similar vein to the above correspondents. — Editor.

I contend that only a killjoy tries to demolish legends! My dad, a Mons Star man, swore blind they had a King's Corporal in his RFA battery. It was an award for an act of bravery in the retreat. I prefer to believe my old dad. — C L Golder, Bolton, Lancs.

'Leaping' into marriage - thanks to SOLDIER

WHEN military modeller Peter Newell was introduced to Soldier magazine - and, more specifically, its Pen Pals columns - by, among others, SSgt Paul Middleton REME, Capt (Retd) David Graeham RTC and the Tank Museum's David Fletcher, he little dreamt what it would lead to.

"Being severely disabled with epilepsy and cancer, I had few friends, especially lady friends, so I placed an advert in Soldier last December," Peter, who lives near Scunthorpe, said.

In January, he received a reply from Susan Robinson, an occupational therapy assistant at a Scunthorpe hospital.

Calling at the Army Careers Information Office in Doncaster to enquire about penfriends, she had been given the pick of two issues of Soldier - and had chosen Peter's advertisement.

The brand new Mr and Mrs Newell sign the register on their big day

After exchanging several letters a week, they met and, as Peter describes it, "that was that." Being Leap Year, Susan took the opportunity to "pop the question" to her fellow-writer by letter. He immediately telephoned to accept.

Peter, a prolific writer on camouflage and markings for Second World War German Army AFVs, US Army tanks in Vietnam and British AFVs in Bosnia, married Sue in April.

"We would like to thank the staff of Soldier for making two lonely people a very, very happy newlywed couple," they said.

By jingle! Ain't BFBS just Grand!

BRITISH Forces radio is just Grand - and that's official. The service has promoted itself to the top of the world with its catchy jingles.

British Forces Broadcasting Service (BFBS) triumphed at the New York Festival in June by winning one of only five Grand awards in the worldwide competition.

Its jingle package, produced in-house by Andy Wright and Paul Daniels, was voted best promotion spot in the World Radio Awards.

Andy and Paul went to New York to collect a gold medal, only to discover that BFBS was the only British station to win the even more prestigious Grand award as well.

BFBS, which transmits to 120,000 British troops and their families and claims a further eight million "eavesdroppers" around the world, also won bronze medals for a Christmas show and DJ James Watt's breakfast programme.

● Former BFBS broadcaster Alan Grace's book This is the British Forces Network, a history of Forces broadcasting in Germany, will be reviewed in our next issue.

THEY SAID IT: This rough draft (right) was advertising agency Saatchi and Saatchi's instant suggestion for a recruiting campaign following reports that French Army officers had admitted the British Army is the greatest thing since sliced bread. GETTING THE BLUES

From the top of his beret to the toes of his shoes, the British soldier (of all ranks) will have a completely new outfit to wear when he takes his girlfriend out. And, unlike the old "blue patrols" which he bought himself, it will be issued to him.

For most units the new No. 1 Dress is indigo blue, but rifle regiments will wear rifle green, the King's Royal Rifle Corps black, Highland regiments dark piper green tunics with kilts instead of trousers and Lowland regiments treads with the blue tunics.

... AND THE GREENS

Green is to be the predominant colour of the well-dressed soldier of the Seventies. Green shirt, liner (a new item), poncho, working belt, gloves - even vests, shorts, pants and "long johns" are in the darkest green.

Phone call home led to Nepal rescue sortie

OUR assistant military attaché in Kathmandu, Lt Col Paul Gay, has written to tell us about the unique co-operation between British and Royal Nepalese Armies which lay behind the international rescue of a Serviceman climbing Mount Everest.

The incident, widely reported in April, was sparked by a satellite telephone call from expedition member Mike Trueman, a retired Army major, to his wife, Helen, a paediatrician working in Hong Kong.

She immediately contacted British Gurkhas Nepal and alerted the duty officer, Maj Tim Woodman.

Maj Woodman called in Col Gay whose request to Capt Dipak Karki, operations officer of 11 Air Brigade, Royal Nepalese Army, resulted in Maj Sudheer Shrestha and Maj Eknath Thapa setting off for Everest Base Camp in their Ecuireuil helicopter.

Meanwhile Maj Woodman had arranged for Dr Padam Chand, the British Gurkhas' doctor, to be on standby for their return while Col Gay confirmed arrangements for the hospital reception.

An hour after being lifted off Everest, Leading Seaman Eamon Fullen of the Royal Navy was being treated for a suspected heart attack.

He made an excellent recovery, reports Col Gay, and flew home a fortnight later.

Nothing 'chicken' about this jungle soldier

PERHAPS stuck for a title for his book, John Cross decided on A Face Like a Chicken's Backside, sub-titled An Unconventional Soldier in South East Asia, 1948-71.

Why such a title? Because a Malayan aborigine guerrilla, won over in a hearts-and-minds exercise in the Emergency 40 years ago, compared his looks to that particular part of a fowl's anatomy.

Such matters are, of course, in the eye of the beholder and the imaginative critic tempered his remarks by describing him as a "good man".

No doubt the author possessed fine character qualities, but while the sub-title is plainly true, the main title is obviously not, if his photograph on the cover is anything to go by.

A girl called Jane also liked the look of him enough to leave England and agree to marry him in Malaya, even though he commanded a company of Gurkhas and was constantly roaming the jungle hunting communist bandits.

Realising the danger he faced she did not stay long, giving him the elbow by having a note air-dropped to him declaring that by the time he got it she would be out of Malaya.

This gave him the freedom to pursue his Army career, which he did for the next 38 years, ten of which he spent in the jungle chasing terrorists.

His book tells of his adventures with the Gurkhas and of his time as commanding officer of the Gurkha Independent Parachute Company; and of his experiences as the last commandant of the British Army's Jungle Warfare School (JWS), in Johore Bahru near the Singapore Causeway, which trained officers and men from five continents.

Ironically, when he left the JWS, he was posted as defence attache to Laos, a country controlled by those of the same political creed against which he had been waging war for most of his military life.

These tales of jungle adventures are only too real – and the book has 16 pages of photographs to prove it. – JM

A Face Like a Chicken's Backside by J P Cross. Greenhill Books, hardback, £17.99.

Last word on the cruellest Fascist

BEFORE committing suicide, Hitler named Joseph Goebbels to succeed him as Chancellor of the Third Reich, which had now shrunk, because of the Red Army's near total occupation of Berlin, to an area one mile from north to south and rather less from east to west.

Goebbels held the highest office in Germany for only a few brief hours until he poisoned himself, his wife and six children. An inglorious end for "the malevolent genius whose oratory once inspired a nation to fight a total war and to hold out to the very end". So writes David Irving in a new biography, Goebbels: Mastermind of the Third Reich.

He draws extensively on more than 75,000 pages of Goebbels's diaries that had lain unrecognised as collection No 1477 in the former Soviet state archives in Moscow, until discovered in 1992 by Dr Elke Frohlich, the leading German authority on the diaries.

A cripple, Joseph Goebbels was taunted at school and the bitterness caused in his formative years was to ferment for the rest of his life.

"He hated the human race, and he boasted of this hatred in his secret diaries," Irving writes.

As a poor student at Heidelberg, Goebbels, destined to be celibate until he was 33, had an unfulfilled liaison with the beautiful Magda Quant, an episode which had a profound effect throughout a life haunted by debt and chaotic relationships with women.

Joseph Goebbels... described as a "malevolent genius"

By the early 1920s, unwanted as a writer, he blamed Jewish employers. In 1924 the Nazi party proved his destiny.

Goebbels was given control of Nazi propaganda in 1929 but also continued his work in the office of gauleiter of Berlin, which put him in charge of some of the movement's thugs.

"G", wrote one English visitor, "has charm and a captivating smile and manner" – surprising, he felt, in one described as the cruellest man in the whole Fascist movement.

Irving sheds light on Kristallnacht – the Night of Broken Glass, on November 9-10, 1938 – which he says was triggered by Goebbels in an anti-Jewish frenzy after his affair with the Czech actress Lida Baarova ended. Goebbels, says the author, later goaded Hitler towards the Final Solution, his annihilation of Europe's Jews.

By the outbreak of war his ministry employed 9,762 professional orators; he had nearly 300 mobile cinemas by the end of 1940; his presses printed 560,000 portraits of Hitler, plus millions of leaflets, posters and wall-newspapers.

Surprisingly, there is no mention of Signal magazine, published by his ministry in 20 languages, with a peak readership of two-and-a-half million.

It would have been interesting if the author had recalled that after the war Soldier was printed on the Signal presses.

In brief

Military Badge Collecting by John Gaylor. New and revised sixth edition brought out to mark the 25th anniversary of this definitive guide to Army badges. There are almost 800 photographs, including the post-Options for Change versions. Pen and Sword Books/Leo Cooper, £17.95

Do Not Stand at My Grave and Weep. Illustrated edition of the poem, author unknown, found in an envelope left by LBdr Stephen Cummins who was killed at the age of 24 when a mine blew up an armoured car near Londonderry in 1989. It was read at his funeral and on BBC TV during Remembrance Sunday last year. Souvenir Press, £4.99.

Britain in the Second World War: A social history by Harold L Smith. Latest in the Documents in Contemporary History series designed for sixth-formers and undergraduates. Manchester University Press, £12.99.

The Vital Guide to Combat Guns and Infantry Weapons, edited by Chris Bishop. Airlife Publishing, £9.95.

A Drop in the Ocean by Jim Burt-Smith and John French. Dramatic accounts of aircrew saved from the sea. Pen and Sword Books/Leo Cooper, £17.95.

A slight source of irritation to this reviewer is Irving's use of the Americanism "gotten" and modern slang such as "cock-up", which seem out of period for this work. But the book's authenticity is convincing, not least because of its wealth of source notes.

Is this, the best balanced of the Goebbels biographies, the last word on his life? Most likely it is. – BJ Goebbels: Mastermind of the Third Reich by David Irving. Focal Point, hardback, £25.

New card offers golf handicap alternative

A NEW golfing organisation for players not attached to clubs in the United Kingdom could make it easier for Servicemen and women to play on courses of their choice.

The recently-formed British Association of Non-Affiliated Golfers (BANAG) anticipates that more than 500 clubs in Britain will accept its player card by the end of the summer.

BANAG has developed an assessment scheme, run by qualified club professionals, under which non-affiliated players are rated as competent, intermediate, proficient or accomplished.

CREDIBLE

It believes the player cards – white, green, silver and gold denoting degrees of skill – offer the only credible alternative to the official handicap system used by clubs to identify a player's golfing ability.

Until now, non-affiliated players have been unable to obtain official handicaps, effectively preventing them from gaining access to most clubs in the UK or from competing.

Cost of joining BANAG is £15 a year (£12 to readers of Soldier). The charge for an assessment by a PGA professional is £12.50, and the player card costs £30.

For membership details ring 0990 200607 or write to BANAG at 11 Calico House, Clove Hitch Quay, Plantation Wharf, London SW11 3TN.

Stevenson wins

CPL Sean Stevenson of the RLC won the 1996 Army golf championships held at the Royal Liverpool Golf Club, beating Sgt David Sandby (AGC) in the final.

The Inter-Corps championships, held on the same course, were won by the Royal Artillery. The runners-up were the RLC. Full reports on both events will appear in the next issue.

Swimming venue

THE Army inter-unit swimming and water polo championships are being held at RMA Sandhurst on July 9 and 10.

Squatting to conquer: Sgt (SI) Steve Grey lifts 145kg to set a British power-lifting record at Larkhill

Novice Steve lifts new British record

BRITISH records tumbled at the first Combined Services power-lifting championships at Larkhill when (SI) Steve Grey (APTC attached 14 Regt RA) got to work in the lightest division on the day.

His opening lifts broke British senior records in all three disciplines – squat, bench press and deadlift – and each successive effort went on to raise the records several more times.

Grey's final attempt of 95.5kg (15 stone) on the bench press would have produced a European best. But although he succeeded in lifting the weight, the attempt was disqualified on a technicality.

In the other disciplines he recorded a squat of 105kg (16.5st) and a deadlift of 145kg (22.8st).

It was a stunning debut for a novice who weighed in at just 56kg (9st). Although he has trained with weights for several years, this was 27-year-old Grey's first competition.

Now being coached by a former world champion, he has been invited to take part in the British national championships at Macclesfield on July 13-14. If he does well he could go on to represent Britain in the European and World events.

Taking the strain: Sgt Steve Grey in action

The competition, hosted by 14 Regiment RA, attracted athletes from the United Kingdom and Germany, including BFG 100kg record-holder Sgt Tony Morland (1 (UK) ADSR). Several leading civilian lifters looking for invitations to the British national championships also competed.

Martin West, the only Royal Navy entrant, completed an outstanding squat of 270kg (42st) in the 90kg division. This was the best lift of the day.

Closest competition was between Morland and 14 Regt's Bdr Greg Slocombe. Morland won the same confrontation in last year's Army event, but this time round they each lifted 577.5kg, with Slocombe getting the verdict by virtue of his slightly lighter bodyweight.

Military and MoD personnel interested in competitive power-lifting should contact Roy Martin on 01793 555130.

Army winners of Combined Services titles were WO2 Steve Morgan; Sgt Wayne Olynn; Cpl Andy Higgs; Bdr Greg Slocombe and Sgt Steve Grey. The Army won the overall team competition.

Late plunder by Sussex sets too steep a target

Army v Sussex II

ALTHOUGH the Army bowled well for the first 40 overs of their 55-over match against Sussex 2nd XI at Crawley, the professionals are adept at the limited overs game and piled on the runs in the closing stages.

Pte Bally Blagrove (11 Sig Regt) in particular bowled tightly and was unlucky in his opening spell not to have taken wickets, the ball dropping into space from involuntary shots.

Capt James Carr-Smith (RY) also bowled well, suffering only in the final couple of overs, and his figures of 1-44 in 11 overs were good by any standard.

Sussex's total of 322-3 looked daunting, and even more so when their visitors were reduced to 19-3 in their fourth over.

Capt Christopher St George (2 Para) and Capt Simon Mason (2 RGJ) got their heads down and put together a stand of 127 for the fourth wicket.

If nothing else, the Army bowlers will have learned that anything minutely outside leg stump will be called a wide.

Sussex II 322-3. Army 223-6 (St George 89, Mason 54). Sussex won by 99 runs.

Army v CCC

Club Cricket Conference fielded several experienced and talented young players against the Army at Aldershot but were restricted by hostile bowling from Pte Blagrove and LCpl Martin Hutton (RDG).

They rode out the storm, however, and scored heavily in the later stages of their innings to finish with 256-4 in their 55 overs.

The Army batsmen were always behind the run-rate, although fine knocks by Sgt Nick Palmer (2 (Trg) Regt AAC) and Sgt Steve Bunn (33 Engr Regt (EOD)) put them in with a chance.

But St George's dismissal just when he looked to be getting on top put paid to any chance of victory.

Despite the defeat, there were several positive aspects to this performance, not least the fast and true square which gave some encouragement to both batsmen and bowlers.

CCC 256-4. Army 211-7 (Palmer 69, Bunn 50). CCC won by 45 runs.

CS v England U-19

Combined Services lost by four wickets to the National Association of Young Cricketers – the England U-19 side – in their two-day match played on a superb wicket at Vine Lane.

The result was slightly manufactured by skipper Flt Lt Andy Spiller's decision not to close the game up with 20 overs to go on the final day. The fact that he did not, and that the result could have gone either way, produced a grand finish in a lovely setting blessed by glorious weather.

Combined Services 248-4 dec and 281-9 dec (St George 49). England U-19 251-6 dec (Cpl S Cornhill (1 PWRR) 4-67) and 279-6. England U-19 won by 4 wickets.

Sappers row to victory in oldest boat race

A BOAT race first rowed 124 years ago between the RA and RE has been revived to mark the 150th anniversary of the Royal Engineers Rowing Club. It ended in a win for the engineers, who led from start to finish on the 800m Reading town regatta course.

The revived match followed the reformation of the Royal Artillery Boat Club in 1995, with RERC chairman Lt Col

Max Heron challenging his RABC opposite number, Lt Col Julian Lyne-Pirkis, to produce a coxed four at the RE regatta in May.

Records indicate the score in an intermittent race dating back to 1868 is five to the gunners, seven to the engineers. The trophy awarded for the 1906 race, when a coxed fours was rowed on finals day at the Henley Royal Regatta, was reinstated for the 1996 version.

Col Heron (0115-9293924) would be pleased to hear from anyone who can fill in gaps in the history of the race, which is to become a regular fixture.

The two clubs are among the oldest in Britain, only Leander and Eton College predating

Tell us about your women sports stars

ARMY units are being asked to nominate their top sports-woman, teams, coaches and administrators for a prestigious gala ceremony.

The awards, organised by The Sunday Times in association with Moët & Chandon, include categories for sports-woman of the year, women's team, student sportswoman, coach-administrator and overseas sportswoman.

Outstanding achievements and efforts of women in sport across all ages, nationalities and disciplines are recognised by the awards, for which nominations are received from the general public.

Director Army Sport Control Board will pass on nominations from regiments, corps and units. Entries have to be in before September 23 and should be sent to DASC, Clayton Barracks, Thornhill Road, Aldershot GU11 2BG (fax Aldershot Mil (722) 3525).

Kelly looks world class in UK trials

SGT Kelly Holmes demonstrated her world-class credentials by winning the 800m and 1,500m at the AAA championships in Birmingham.

With the event doubling as Britain's official Olympic trials, Holmes was under pressure from Diane Modahl in the two-lap race.

But Modahl, recently reinstated to athletics after her exoneration following discredited tests for performance-enhancing drugs, was left trailing on the final bend as Holmes went up a gear and cruised home in 1min 57.84, the fastest time in the world this year.

It was the second time in a few weeks that she had posted a 1996 best. At the end of May she ran 1min 58.87sec while winning in Slovenia.

Holmes, serving with the Household Division Army Youth Team, is the only British woman to attain the Olympic 1,500m qualifying time. She has not ruled out the possibility of competing over both distances in Atlanta.

● Cpl Alan Shepherd (2 Sig Regt) retained the Army 10,000m championship when he recorded a time of 31min 43.8sec in the Aldershot Military Stadium.

He finished 11 seconds clear of Sgt Ken Butler (82 AB Sqn) while LCpl Sean Malone (BAD Kineton) won the veteran title in the same race.

● LCpl David Nolan (1 RRF) doubled up to win both the 400m (46.4sec) and the 100m (11.03sec) at the Army individual championships at the Aldershot Military Stadium on June 5.

Other winners were:

Carling Cup entries wanted ... the more the merrier

ARMY teams – as many of them as possible – are being invited to take part in the Carling Cup, the country's biggest five-a-side football tournament.

Backed by Premiership sponsors Carling, the organisers hope to attract as many as 10,000 teams from pubs, clubs, sports centres, friends, families, and workplace. A free subscription to Sky Sports is being offered to every person who takes part.

The tournament kicks off in September and closing date for entries is August 23. About 6,000 teams and 42,000 players took part in last year's inaugural competition which was proclaimed by the Football Association, professionals and competitors.

FA REGULATIONS

First round matches will be staged between September 22 and October 20, leading to finals on December 7-8. No women's or mixed teams are allowed under FA regulations, and players must be over 18.

Last year's winners won a trip to Orlando, and the 1996 Carling Cup winners will also win a holiday and Sky satellite systems or free beer for a year.

Cost of entry is £37.50 (every team is guaranteed at least three games), and all profits will be donated by Carling to Comic Relief. Entry forms are available from the Secretary of the Army Football Association, Clayton Barracks, Thornhill Road, Aldershot GU11 2BG or by ringing the Carling Cup credit card hotline on 01483 205000.

Loggies lift Stambois Cup at third attempt

A NEW corps name has been engraved on the Stambois Cup, presented nearly 50 years ago for football matches between the RAOC and REME.

When the RAOC disbanded on the formation of the Royal Logistic Corps, it was decided the tradition should be continued by the new corps.

REME promptly won the first two matches in the new era. So a little bit of military football history was created at Bordon in the third match of the current series when the RLC overturned a 2-0 deficit to beat REME 4-3 after extra time.

It was a corps double for the loggies following their 2-1 win over REME in the Massey Trophy league.

The match also marked the final appearance for the UK-based RLC team, for a while at least, of Army forward Cpl

Dave Maynard (27 Tpt Regt RLC), who departed soon afterwards for 2 CS Regt RLC.

The trophy, which has now gone on display in HQ QMG at Andover, was presented in 1947 by Arthur A Stambois.

The first of 46 keenly-contested inter-corps matches was held at the end of the 1948-49 season. Last winners of the original competition were the RAOC.

Infantry beat RE at last

RE 2, Infantry 3

THE Infantry just had the edge in a pulsating first half against the Royal Engineers, taking the lead through Pte Simon Yeo (Cheshire).

Cpl Rikki Banbridge (Staffords) and LCpl James McIlvogue (WG) added further goals midway through the second half as the Infantry

Signals in Malta

CYPRUS-based 3 Squadron, 9 Signal Regiment (Radio) played three matches on a footballing visit to Malta, drawing 2-2 with the Maltese Police, losing 6-1 to the Armed Forces of Malta and drawing 1-1 with Malta B.

The tour was assisted by a £1,800 grant from the Army Sports Lottery.

looked to be heading to a comfortable win.

But McIlvogue was sent off for retaliation and the sappers scored twice in the last ten minutes through Sgt Bobby Lockwood and Cpl Lee Innes.

The Infantry held out to record their first ever win against the engineers in six attempts.

Skydivers need help

THE ARMY 9 skydiving team is being hotly tipped as favourites for this year's British championships.

If that happens, the team would represent GB at the 1997 world championships.

But the highly-motivated individuals who make up the team have a serious problem – they are hampered by lack of funds for training.

At the moment the team – an officer, warrant officer, two sergeants, a lance corporal and two privates – pay for their own training, amounting to thousands of pounds each year.

Recently the Army 9 prepared with the US Army's Golden Knights at Fort Bragg, giving them an edge they hope will see them carry off the GB title.

Now they are looking for sponsorship for their next training camp, to be held in Holland or southern France. Maj Mark Davis, HQ 39 Inf Bde, BFPO 801 (01846 608707) would be glad to hear from anyone who can help.
