Poland casts a spell on the Desert Rats

EXCITING new horizons opened up for British soldiers as they took their Challenger tanks and Warrior armoured vehicles into Poland for the Army's first brigade-level field training since the Gulf War.

The Desert Rats of the 7th Armoured Brigade moved by rail and road to the Drawsko-Pomorski training area 80 miles east of Szczecin (Stettin) for two weeks of intensive training on unrivalled facilities, writes Gordon Skilling.

Unpronounceable names with unfamiliar combinations of letters such as "szczwy" are set to become stock-in-trade for military commanders navigating over very different countryside.

Larger than Salisbury Plain and almost double the size of Soltau, the area offers difficult wooded terrain with myriad water obstacles unlike anything available in Canada, Britain or Germany.

Exercise Ulan Eagle revolved around the battle groups of the 2nd Royal Tank Regiment and 1st Battalion, The Royal Highland Fusiliers, with an enemy and administrative support provided largely by the 2nd Battalion, The Royal Regiment of Fusiliers.

Also taking part were the Light Dragoons and elements of the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards, with support from 35 Engineer Regiment and 2 Battalion REME.

The sappers particularly enjoyed the challenging terrain, especially as an exercise planned for the Czech Republic last year had to be cancelled because of commitments in Bosnia.

Poznan

In 1994, F Company, 1st Battalion, Scots Guards exercised further south near Poznan while elements of 5 Airborne Brigade trained with the 6th Polish Air Assault Brigade at Krakow.

An exercise in Poland for 22 Field Ambulance had to be cancelled last year but 7 Company, 1st Battalion, Coldstream Guards exercised in Hungary in 1995, as did elements of HQ 42 (North West) Brigade.

Ulan Eagle was closely watched by the Poles, who provided engineering and logistic support and are keen to join NATO. A Ukrainian delegation led by their Defence Minister proved knowledgeable on British equipment.

While the Desert Rats exercised in Poland, D Company, 1st Battalion, The Royal Welch Fusiliers were in the Ukraine. Most of their training involved range work, but a short exercise was planned with the Ukrainians.

During Ulan Eagle, the three countries announced a tri-partite agreement providing for an exchange of training facilities and expertise.

Only 3,500 of the 6,500 Germany-based Desert Rats deployed to Poland for the exercise, which was designed as a trial. Next year, three battle groups will exercise there for periods of up to three weeks, followed by most of 20 Armoured Brigade.

YOUR CHANCE TO USE THE MOST POWERFUL WEAPON KNOWN TO MAN. YOUR VOTE.

If you want to vote, your name must be on the electoral register.

As a serving Regular member of HM Forces, you only need to register once as a service voter, and your vote is assured for the rest of your service career, wherever you're posted.

Registration forms are available from the admin office of your unit or ship.

Send the completed form to the appropriate electoral registration officer (the form tells you how). You will then be able to vote at all Parliamentary, European Parliamentary and local government elections.

Wives and husbands of Regular members of HM Forces can also register as service voters or, if they prefer, register each year as civilian voters (so long as they are living in the UK).

Don't Lose Your Right To Vote.

NO VOTE  NO VOICE.

Welsh Cavalry rides to rescue of wrecked school

SOLDIERS from Wales's only cavalry regiment were honoured guests in a Bosnian town after helping to rebuild its school.

Men from the 1st The Queen's Dragoon Guards serving with the Peace Implementation Force (IFOR) left their Challenger tanks behind when they were invited to the re-opening of the school in the Muslim town of Kljuc.

Maj Patrick Andrews, 2iC QDG and project manager, said that during the four-year civil war the school had been used by the Serbian army as a barracks.

It was reoccupied by Bosnian Muslims after a series of counter-attacks, by which time the structure had been badly damaged and every bit of equipment and furniture destroyed or stolen. The British Overseas Development Administration (ODA) offered a grant of £16,000, provided the Queen's Dragoon Guards oversaw the project.

Work was carried out by local craftsman under the supervision of Maj Andrews's team. The soldiers also brought in desks and books, teaching aids and writing materials.

RMP opens fire as mob closes

MILITARY police fired a shot to control angry crowds at Banja Luka in Bosnia.

The incident occurred when a patrol of ten RMPs from Herford-based 3 Regiment RMP was threatened by a hostile mob while trying to confiscate illegal armoured vehicles.

They found four heavily-weaponed vehicles while checking a convoy of authorised Bosnian Serb police vehicles in Banja Luka in the run-up to the elections, and were quickly surrounded and jostled by about 200 people.

When the crowd attempted to overturn a Land Rover containing an RMP and an interpreter, a warning shot was fired in the air by Sgt Colin Hewitt.

The RMPs drove off with the vehicles, but 15 minutes later were boxed in by Bosnian Serb police and a second mob.

A police chief arrived with Lt Col Desmond Bergin, CO 3 Regt, and calmed the situation.

Lt Col Bergin praised his men. "I am delighted with their actions. They were cool, calm and very professional," he said.

The confiscated vehicles were armed with an anti-aircraft gun, a multi-barrelled rocket launcher, and a 12.7mm machine-gun.

They were moved to a secure compound in a Peace Implementation Force (IFOR) base.

Territorial Army sapper Maj Bill Paynter with the Bailey bridge constructed from redundant stock found by him. Sappers from 3 Armoured Engineer Squadron put up the bridge in time for the Bosnian elections

COMING SOON ...

Lots more laughter on the way

YOUR colourful Soldier will soon be even brighter, starting with the October 28 issue.

First instalment of a 13-part collectors' series on the uniforms of the new regiments and corps appears in that edition to mark a greater use of full colour in the magazine.

The postcard series is an absolute must for anyone interested in the uniforms of the British Army.

MORE CARTOONS

That's not all. Two more talented cartoonists will be joining regular contributor Dickie Bird and Soldier's own occasional illustrator Les Gwyer.

Look out for a new cartoon strip in the classified pages. Pomp and Circumstance is the work of Darren Dodd, a Regular soldier serving with the Royal Military Police in Northern Ireland.

And former Royal Engineer Chip Wood, whose Gulf War sketches won a national award for humour, will also be adding to the magazine's chuckle quotient. An occasional series in which he takes an irreverent view of all things military starts before Christmas.

Dickie, Darren, Chip and Les... you've got to laugh!

Sappers open up bridge to the ballot box

ROYAL Engineers knew the clock was against them when a vital bridge in Bosnia was washed away by a flash flood days before the start of the elections.

But with teamwork and hard graft they rebuilt the entire structure in just five days.

The first elections for nearly a decade took place as British soldiers deployed with the NATO-led, 60,000-strong Peace Implementation Force (IFOR) guarded ballot boxes and ensured local people could vote without intimidation.

What made the feat by sappers from 3 Armoured Engineer Squadron, 22 Engineer Regiment more impressive was the fact that they built the 70ft bridge using spare equipment left over from other projects. They now have a bridge in reserve for future emergencies.

Their involvement began when a bridge leading to Fajtoy, near Sanski Most, collapsed. A temporary structure was erected within hours, but it was not strong enough to take buses vital for getting voters to the ballot boxes.

By the following week the wreckage of the old bridge had been cleared, the site prepared, and 23 Royal Engineers had completed the 35-ton Bailey bridge.

Col Andrew Mantell, Commander RE in the British-led Multi-National Division South West, said the quick work was the result of tremendous team effort.

"If anyone wants to know why we train so hard, this bridge is the answer. A critical route was opened up for the elections. It is a significant contribution to the freedom of movement for the people of Bosnia and IFOR."

More than 200 people were involved in the project, including Territorial Army officer Maj Bill Paynter, a chartered surveyor from Bedfordshire, who tracked down all the redundant sections needed for the bridge.

Return to Rorke's Drift

ALMOST 117 years after their forebears fought a battle synonymous with Victorian heroism, uniformed British soldiers and Zulu tribesman have together built a community hall for the people of Rorke's Drift.

Thirty-five undergraduates from Southampton University Officers Training Corps and a detachment of Royal Engineers and The Royal Regiment of Wales constructed the steel-framed, brick building during a four-week project supported by the Prince of Wales, President Mandela and the King of the Zulus.

The hall is 200 yards from the site of the Swedish Lutheran mission station where, on January 22, 1879, 153 men of B Company, 24th Regiment, South Wales Borderers, repulsed a 4,000-strong Zulu force intent on invading Natal.

VICTORIA CROSSES

Eleven Victoria Crosses – the most won in a single action – were awarded.

A patron of Exercise Scholastic Acorn was Brig David Bromhead, whose ancestor, Lt Gonville Bromhead, led the South Wales Borderers at Rorke's Drift.

In the spirit of reconciliation which enveloped the building project, Zulus worked shoulder to shoulder with British soldiers.

Each of the officer cadets had made a personal contribution of £1,500 towards the project and were rewarded with overwhelming gratitude and hospitality in the Kwa Zulu Natal community.

The hall was designed by site

Sgt Terry Lee RE and Them-binkosi Zulu worked together on a new community hall close to the Rorke's Drift battlefield in Kwa Zulu Natal foreman SSgt Chris Jackson RE, who also laid the foundations. Lt Col Andy Harris RE, commanding officer of the Southampton UOTC, handed over the keys at a joyful 5½-hour dedication service.

A small British graveyard close to the battle site is carefully tended by the South African War Graves Commission.

CSgt Mike Norris of the 1st Battalion, The Royal Regiment of Wales, said after visiting it: "Being a Welshman myself and having been brought up in the traditions of the regiment, I found it humbling to stand before these men. I had a lump in my throat and tears in my eyes when I touched the monument.

"It is a real privilege for me to be here and to feel the pride that these men gave to Wales."

The project team was the first uniformed detachment of British soldiers to return to the scene of the battle in 117 years.

Army chiefs pay tribute to Wales

WALES'S long and glorious contribution to the British Army was celebrated at Cardiff Castle when Gen Sir Charles Guthrie, Chief of the General Staff, and members of the Army Board met to launch a three-day recruiting display.

Coopers Field, to the rear of the Castle, was the setting for a display of stands, exhibitions and demonstrations depicting the role and capability of the Army in Wales and career opportunities available.

The event, heralded by a 25-pounder gun salute, was opened by Armed Forces Minister Nicholas Soames. He unveiled the Army's first mobile recruiting office before it began a tour of the Principality.

SEME Bordon to be market tested

A RANGE of activities at the Army's School of Electrical and Mechanical Engineering (SEME), at Bordon in Hampshire, are to be market tested.

Announcing the decision, the Armed Forces Minister, Nicholas Soames, said activities would be subjected to a competitive market test with the objective of awarding either a Service level agreement to a winning in-house bid, or a contract to a winning private sector bidder, in April 1998.

Muscleman of Middlesbrough

These members of the recruiting team from 34th (Northern) Signal Regiment (V), Middlesbrough, had their very own Hunter to seek out potential volunteers for the regiment – in the form of one of the regulars on TV's Gladiators programme.

The Terriers (back row, Sig Mangam, SSgt Durnall, Sig Thomson and Sig Turnbull, with Cpl Bavin and Sig Yeoman in front) were among local Territorial Army units helping out with a radio competition on Teesside.

As he completed a 30-mile march across Dartmoor at the end of a successful All-Arms Commando Course, Spr Khadkabadur Gurung became the first Queen's Gurkha Engineer – possibly even the first Gurkha – to be awarded the coveted green commando beret.

Spr Khadka is being presented with a commando dagger by Maj Alistair Sheppard, officer commanding 67 Gurkha Independent Field Squadron, QGE, to mark his achievement. Capt Andy Clee (centre) also passed the same course.

Green goes the Gurkha

Colourful Canadian

The 1st Battalion, The Royal Irish Regiment has a new set of Colours hanging in its officers' mess in Catterick – but with a difference.

Col Tom Howland of 1 R Irish's affiliated regiment, The Princess Louise Fusiliers in Halifax, Nova Scotia, brought these miniature framed Colours from Canada to present after the Duke of York had presented new Colours to the battalion at Alma Barracks. Links between the Princess Louise Fusiliers and the Royal Irish Regiment go back to 1932.

Worthwhile investment!

Looking delighted with the Investors In People (IIP) award which they received from the Queen's former press secretary, Michael Shea (centre), are the members of the Army Presentation Team.

Patrick Davidson-Houston (Commander APT Designate), Col Rory Clayton (Commander APT), Capt Leisa Tucker and Cpl Chris Doel) was described by Surrey Training and Enterprise Council as a "shining example of British enterprise – innovative, dynamic and constantly striving for success".

Rec-Hammond-ation!

An "outstanding achievement" by the Army Careers Office in Redruth, Cornwall, in boosting enlistments during a recruiting drive has been recognised.

Office manager WO2 Pete Hammond is pictured receiving a certificate of commendation from Col Simon Young of the Directorate of Army Recruiting.

Tinker, tailor, Terrier, sweep

Part-time soldiers from the north west of England display the differences between their civilian and territorial occupations to the 200 directors and company managers who visited the annual Reserve Forces Day at Altcar Training Camp near Formby.

PEOPLE

The name's Bond...

Although unit press officers usually stay in the background, on this occasion Soldier makes an exception.

Capt Alistair Bond of 208 (Liverpool) Field Hospital (V), an orthopaedic staff nurse for the Royal Liverpool and Broadgreen University Teaching Hospital, is pictured taking a peek at R&B Review, the hospital's magazine, whose renamed title earned Alistair a competition award.

Friendly way to lift morale

NAAFI is reported to be considering proposals to work in partnership with private sector companies in order to return the 75-year-old institution to profitability.

Admirable though this may be in today's world, dominated as it is by the balance sheet, I hope those in charge don't lose sight of the importance of moral support.

I don't believe you can put a price on morale, nor that it can be made to pay. Naafi tea may have been the butt of many jokes, but for soldiers returning from the battlefields of Europe during the first half of this century it came to represent the comforts of home.

In the modern world of soldiering, many people are involved in the work of "keeping up morale". Take BFBS, for example. One of my colleagues regularly broadcasts to Bosnia, and the letters she gets contain more than bare requests for popular songs.

They are, by turn, touching and sad, happy and heart-rending. One soldier requests a particular record because he wants to say he's sorry for a row he had before he left. Another wants to congratulate his wife on the safe arrival of the baby he has yet to see.

They write to Linda because she's a friend. She has a Service background and they know she knows what it's like. She has come to represent all the friends they've left at home.

While I was broadcasting live the other day, a chap rang through to the studio from overseas. He wanted me to track down some information for his wife. I had never met him, but he had formed an image of me as a friendly neighbour, someone who wouldn't mind helping out.

It's at such moments that I feel I'm doing something useful – that I'm contributing to the work of morale support. That may well sound pretentious or patronising, except that I have experienced support work from the other side.

As an Army wife in Germany I valued the contribution made by people who worked for BFBS, the Naafi, Service papers and magazines, and the library. I frequently had cause to thank any number of padres and, in particular, the one who carried my washing machine down to the cellar when the removal men left me to my own devices. Morale is notoriously difficult to pin down, and asking people to quantify it is an impossible task. How would you describe morale in your unit? I suppose it depends on who you ask.

If members of a unit are slouching about with their chins on the ground, it's a safe bet that morale could be said to be low.

But there are other, more subtle, indications, such as breakdowns in efficiency, work taking longer, mistakes creeping in.

Potential problems get overlooked and develop into crises. Rumours proliferate. Factions develop and hold sotto voce conversations in the corridors.

There is a feeling that no one in authority understands, that there is no one to turn to for support.

In the military world this is where those in morale support come into their own. Overseas, they will be living and working in the same environment, with the same problems and the same regulations.

This is, in my opinion, the key to successful morale support. Those working within its remit not only must have "been there, done that and got the T-shirt": they must also be supported.

In an outpost in Germany, we had a Naafi shop. There was also a row of shops at the bottom of the street where food was cheap. I, like many others, nipped into the Naafi for teabags and pickles and British sausages.

I can't imagine we boosted the profits to any great extent, but we didn't shop there for commercial reasons. The products represented home – and the banter at the till was enough to lift a flagging spirit.

There were German radio stations playing British hit singles with barely a word in between. But they couldn't compete with old friends on BFBS who regaled us with tales of packing boxes and the perils of marching in and out.

While I wish the Naafi well with their exercise, I do hope they remember that you can't put a price on the value of an old friend.

No one would argue with their aim to run shops which offer "world class value for money" – just so long as less tangible benefits also figure in the calculations.

On a pet subject

A READER offers this advice to anyone contemplating putting their dog into quarantine when returning to the United Kingdom.

"Where possible," she states, "get a good person in the UK who understands dogs and cats to check out personally several quarantine kennels for cleanliness, warmth, weather-proof facilities and standard of food."

Chat to the staff and weigh the place up, she adds, since it is you who are paying high fees and should expect decent standards.

"After a period, you can move your pet under the MAFF regulations if you are not happy or for whatever reason. Six months is a long time, and standards do vary. Anyone not satisfied with a particular kennel should write to MAFF HQ and their MP."

The summer camps, which also include canoeing, body boarding, swimming, rock climbing and hill walking, started in the early 1980s, providing much appreciated relief for the parents of Service families based in Northern Ireland.

Erskine's quality service

STAFF at Erskine Hospital for disabled ex-Servicemen and women at Bishopton near Glasgow have been praised in a report by an independent review body.

"In every part of the service we found staff dedicated to the people they serve," says the Scottish Health Advisory Service (SHAS).

The Erskine, says the report, has an "impressive" philosophy that every ex-Serviceman and woman in its care deserves the quality of care, kindness and understanding that are the direct result of its best team endeavour.

In addition to quality nursing care, the report goes on, Erskine Hospital – opened in 1916 – offers a wide range of medical, therapeutic and recreational facilities.

The SHAS encouraged further use of the respite care which Erskine is able to offer disabled people living at home.

● An independent charity, Erskine Hospital, with £8m annual running costs, relies heavily on the public for its existence. Last year it had an operating deficit of £2.4m.

Speedy-paying fund helps at difficult times

IN FEBRUARY 1964, the Army Kinema Corporation (AKC, now SSV), made a £15,000 donation and created an organisation which, like Topsy, has "grewed and grewed" into the thriving Soldiers' Widows and Widowers Fund (SWF) of today.

Four years later, the AKC forked out a further £10,000 and a sister organisation, the Single Soldiers' Dependants' Fund (SSDF) burst into what, in the 1990s, is still an extremely active life.

Members subscribe £3 a year and, in the event of their death, their dependants receive an immediate grant to alleviate financial stress.

By the time of the SSDF's conception, with grants of £350, the SWF's grants had risen from £350 to £600. Rising every year since 1980, grants are now a maximum of £4,250 for the former and £6,500 for the latter.

Both funds have survived events such as the Falklands and Gulf Wars, IRA atrocities and the conflict in Bosnia, as well as the day-to-day casualties which sadly are part and parcel of soldiering, says secretary and treasurer Maj (Retd) David Earle, a former member of the Pay Corps who has been in post for the past ten years.

Administration of the funds is managed by only two other persons, Pat Smith, a virtual fixture since 1978, and relative newcomer Pat Saunders, three years in post.

The financial operation is under the direction of Maj Gen (Retd)

Mike Swindells, Controller of the Army Benevolent Fund and head of the Funds Executive Committee, which reports to the funds' president, Gen Sir Michael Rose.

"If, sadly, someone dies, we pride ourselves on the quick turn-round of payment, to ease the situation," Maj Gen Swindells said.

November will be a bitter-sweet month, Maj Earle told Soldier.

The office (in Empress State Building) is moving to Upavon and he and his team will go their separate ways.

But, he says, a bright light on the horizon is the assurance by the Charity Commissioner that there is a good possibility of one Soldiers' Dependants Fund being formed, to start, it is hoped, in January.

"We can see enormous benefit, without any detriment to members," he added.

So, as one era ends, another is scheduled to begin.

But, as Pat Smith put it, "for £3 a year, it's a most wonderful investment."

Investors ...

THREE military organisations – the Tri-Service Resettlement Centre, the Army School of Catering and the Royal Naval School of Educational and Training Technology – have been recognised as Investors In People (IIP).

Lt Col David Bowman, commandant of the resettlement centre, said that, despite initial scepticism about the IIP, he and his colleagues had found that the process involved had "considerably improved" good practices already in place.

Col Philippe Rossiter, ASC Commandant, commented: "The IIP has been extremely effective in helping us to focus on our systems and develop them to benefit the whole organisation."

SNAG FOR ARMY HOMELESS?

REVISED measures on homelessness scheduled to come into effect early next year could cause additional problems for Army families returning to civvy street.

Provisions on homelessness in the 1996 Housing Act revise the present duties which local housing authorities owe to families who are homeless or threatened with homelessness.

Currently, under Part III of the Housing Act 1985, a household which is unintentionally homeless and in a priority need group is entitled to suitable accommodation secured by the local housing authority, says the Department of the Environment. "Priority need", the department points out, means families with children, pregnant women or someone who is "vulnerable".

However, according to a judgement in the House of Lords, the present homelessness legislation was never intended to give local authorities a duty to provide permanent accommodation for households accepted as statutorily homeless.

The duty is to secure suitable accommodation, which could be for as little as 28 days.

"We are quite concerned about this," say the Defence Housing

Jubilant Julie scores a first

JULIE Kitching, wife of Falling-bosnel-based Cpl Mike Kitching, Royal Logistic Corps, has become one of the first to pass a revolutionary information technology (IT) course taught by computer.

Developed for the Computer Skills College in Lancashire, the 20-25 hour course is claimed to be a world first in that the computer acts as lecturer and examiner, ultimately leading to a City and Guilds IT certificate.

PART-TIME

"I already had a lot of work experience involving computers, but no formal qualifications," says Julie, who works as a part-time clerk at the base and has a seven-year-old son.

"Because I could choose when to study, the course blended perfectly with my day job and my responsibilities at home. I'd recommend it to anyone wishing to improve themselves – particularly Service wives like myself who are seeking to increase their job prospects when they return to the UK."

Having earned her first IT qualification, Julie is already enrolled for a business management diploma course.

The Ulan Eagle has landed

A NEW dimension was added to training for Royal Engineers taking part in Exercise Ulan Eagle with the 7th Armoured Brigade in Poland.

As well as digging holes and filling them in, the sappers learned a new skill... planting "trees" before blowing them down again.

Sappers of 35 Engineer Regiment Group were delighted at what was described as an "engineer theme park".

The trees were actually large logs dug in at strategic junctions in the woods. When a battle group withdrew in contact, combat engineers could carry out route-denial by blowing down trees to block the tracks.

It was found to be more realistic than festooning trees with white tape.

Exercising in Poland was a very satisfying experience for all the Desert Rats, commanded by Brig David Montgomery.

"It is quite striking to drive a tank down a narrow ride of trees and feel in 'proper country'," he said.

He explained that his purpose was not to take part in the diplomatic niceties of Partnership for Peace or peacekeeping exercises which might prepare them for a possible tour in Bosnia next year.

"This is the heavy metal end of high-intensity conflict," he said. "It is good, old-fashioned war-fighting, and if we can get that side right, then lower-intensity conflicts are relatively easy to get to grips with."

One of his main objectives was a strategic road and rail move to deploy 3,500 of his 6,500 Germany-based troops into Poland.

The 700km road move was a dramatic success. Everyone arrived in the right place at the right time and with the right equipment, said Maj Lee Drakely. It can take hours, even weeks, for trucks to pass through the border post, but the Polish authorities processed each of 35 columns of 30 vehicles in just ten minutes.

The move also involved 15 long trains carrying more than 500 vehicles, and co-ordination was a difficult task.

"It took four months of detailed planning," said Deputy Chief of Staff Maj Jake Thackray. The German military police had been a tremendous help on the journey out.

"We moved more than 700 vehicles across 700km during eight days and had only 43 break down. That really is a brilliant statistic."

By the time the last convoy rolled into the exercise area, the entire route was clear.

But the logistic role was not limited to moving the brigade, re-supplying, arming, feeding and operating an underground fuel station with 200,000 litres - enough for 2½ days.

"I also looked after aspects like the scrap metal contract, getting rid of waste oil and disposing of the human ordure produced by 3,500 people during a three-week exercise."

As well as re-supply and maintenance, one of Maj Thackray's priorities was to ensure that if there was a real accident, soldiers would be treated and evacuated as fast as possible.

On the evening after rehearsing their medical evacuation procedures, a soldier exercising "in the middle of nowhere" was thrown from his armoured vehicle.

"He had a gash from his thigh to his knee you could have inserted two fists in," said Maj Thackray.

"We had a doctor with him in 20 minutes, stabilised 15 minutes later and ten minutes later was in for surgery."

Training for the teeth arms was as good as for the supporting arms.

"With 13,000 vehicles, including 500 heavy tracked vehicles, it is quite a big train set to play with," said Brig Montgomery.

Biggest advantage of the Polish area was that it was completely unfamiliar to British troops. Soldiers had to go through the proper battle procedure. Other than establishing what could and could not be done, there had been no pre-reconnaissance. Commanders were given their orders, and the time to do their preparation and checks as they would for real if deploying in an operational theatre.

Ulan Eagle began with nine days of battle group-level training, ending with three days of test exercises. Battle group commanders had the opportunity to carry out their own training before the tests.

This was followed by four days of brigade training, then a demonstration for Polish, Ukrainian and British dignitaries.

The purpose of the tests was not to trip people up, but to provide a snapshot of where they were in their training, said Col David Phipps, Commander of the Combined Arms Field Training Group in Germany.

"The brigade commander sets his training objectives and I write the exercise round them, then write the enemy activity to meet the objectives," he said.

His staff of 70 could speed up or slow down the exercise depending on how well it was going.

Controllers such as WO1 (SMI) Andrew Douglas-Rickett were on hand to supervise and regulate the battles, as well as impose safety restrictions when the assault pioneers blew up their "trees".

"It's good training. We don't often get the chance to blow trees because it is a politically sensitive issue," he said.

After a successful and exciting strategic move, soldiers could enjoy realistic route-denial, mobility tasks and counter-mobility obstacles during their tactical moves on the eastern side of the north German-Polish Plain.

Showtime for Apache

ONE OF the main attractions at Farnborough International Airshow 96 was a stunning display of aerial manoeuvrability by a McDonnell Douglas Apache ground attack helicopter, writes Laurie Manton.

A variant of this aircraft has been selected to replace Lynx and will provide the Army Air Corps with its attack capability well into the next century.

The British Army version will be equipped with the new Longbow radar, which can scan a battlefield and detect up to 256 targets, and armed with Hellfire anti-tank guided missiles, CRV -7 rockets and a 30mm chain gun.

Apache's two-man crew is protected by a boron-carbide armour capable of withstanding 12.7mm armour-piercing rounds. The helicopter is scheduled to enter service in 2000.

An event the size of the Farnborough airshow has to have a medical plan capable of coping with anything from a wasp sting to a full-scale aviation disaster.

Emergency medical, ambulance and first aid arrangements were co-ordinated by the Society of British Aerospace Companies' medical director, Dr Brian Robertson (a Territorial Army colonel in his own right) from a medical control centre established on the site.

It was supported by Army medics and chefs and included a large contingent of TA personnel from 205 (Scottish) Field Hospital (Volunteers) who set up a 100-bed field hospital on the edge of the airfield.

Commanded by Col Mike Smith, the deployment gave the TA medics an opportunity to practise military and medical skills.

At one stage, during a lull in the proceedings, the soldiers donned "noddy suits" to rehearse Nuclear, Biological and Chemical (NBC) warfare drills.

Also supporting the event were chefs and trainees from the Aldershot-based Army School of Catering.

SSgt Andrew Winder commanded the detachment which provided meals to St John Ambulance Brigade volunteers.

Production NCOs on a management course supervised trainee chefs who were learning how to cook under field conditions. Two field kitchens, each with a four-strong staff, catered for 140 medical personnel at each of the three daily meals. A St John spokesman described the catering arrangement as "an outstanding success".

As the airshow got underway, the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) was preparing for the official opening of its new £100 million research complex on the north-west corner of Farnborough airfield.

Employing some 12,000 staff, more than half of whom are highly-trained scientists and engineers, DERA is the largest organisation of its kind in Europe. It has an annual turnover of around £1 billion.

"The new site will be the full single headquarters for Ministry of Defence science and technology research," said company secretary Liz Pearce.

State-of-the-art facilities include a Mission Simulation Environments department which uses Hovers, a sophisticated battle-field helicopter simulation facility.

Another DERA department, the Centre for Human Sciences, was formed by combining experts from the Army Personnel Research Establishment, the Institute for Aviation Medicine and other areas.

It can advise the MoD on subjects including crash protection and emergency escape; personnel selection and physical performance; and human-system interface development.

DERA's Protection and Life Sciences Division (PLSD) includes responsibility for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down.

Chemical and biological agent detectors, individual protective equipment (IPE), the Colpro collective protection, and medical counter-measures deployed by UK forces during the Gulf War were developed from research completed at Porton Down.

Agreement has been reached in principle for the next Royal Navy-British Army Equipment Exhibition (RNBAEE) to be staged on the Farnborough site.

The event, scheduled for September next year, has for many years been held on the Pegasus Village exhibition site near Rushmoor Arena at Aldershot.

What a Wiay to go . . .

A GAP in the Rapier firing programme at the Royal Artillery Range on Benbecula was snapped up by London's part-time paras for an exercise with a difference.

Most members of the 10th (Volunteer) Battalion, The Parachute Regiment, whose headquarters are in Chelsea's Kings Road, had not heard of Benbecula let alone knew of its remote location in Scotland's Outer Hebrides . . . but that is where they ended up on their two-week summer camp.

Rugged conditions combined with first-class administrative and training facilities contributed to the success of Exercise Celtic Fling, which tested the soldiers' military and adventurous training skills. Facilities at the range complex are under-used and have tremendous potential for training.

The three-phase programme began with a high-tempo conventional military exercise, mounted from RAF Lyneham, and culminating in a landing on Benbecula after a parachute insertion had been aborted because of high winds.

Sub-units deployed on offensive company group tasks as the Territorial Army soldiers made full use of the dramatic Hecla Mountain range on South Uist and the coastal plains to the west and north, including the rugged island of Wiay.

Wiay was the location for a simulated helicopter crash and survival exercise during which the Paras practised recent survival training in a demanding situation which allowed no scope for short cuts. Aggressive patrolling, including the conduct of observation posts and ambushes, confirmed second phase of Celtic Fling, making use of excellent locations and natural challenges on Benbecula itself, North and South Uist, and the surrounding waterways.

Hill walkers, climbers and abseilers found demanding conditions on Hecla Range, and mountain and road biking, and horse riding were popular. The soldiers also had a chance to try fly fishing, dinghy sailing, canoeing, windsurfing and sub-aqua diving.

Ironman competition

Military and adventurous training skills were combined in the battalion Ironman competition which brought the annual camp to a gruelling conclusion. The task involved soldiers covering 120km from the southern to the northern extremities of the Uist group of islands. Section-strength teams completed 23 stands on the way.

After 36 hours of hard work, 4 Company triumphed to win the 10 Para Ironman trophy.

Remote St Kilda, 46km west of the Outer Hebrides, provided a stunning day out for 40 members of the battalion. The tiny island, now home to a small detachment of soldiers from the Benbecula ranges, once supported a population of 200 who lived mainly on a diet of sea birds collected from the 300m cliffs.

The population was evacuated in 1930 after a particularly severe winter, and the London-based Paras viewed their visit as a rare and unforgettable opportunity. They were able to repay the hospitality of Benbecula and Uist by gutting and renovating a remote climbers' bothy, long since discarded and used as a rubbish tip.

An open evening was held for the islands' Army Cadet Force, which was shown the equipment and training methods of a parachute battalion.

Celtic Fling ended with a flight south, culminating in the battalion parachuting onto Salisbury Plain.

Why the Yorkies no longer take a dim view of patrols

SOLDIERS serving with the 1st Battalion, The Prince of Wales's Own Regiment of Yorkshire in Northern Ireland are at the cutting edge of military technology – not for the first time.

They are helping with trials for a new laser-aided rifle sighting system which brings hi-tech views from a rifle-mounted box of wizardry to the soldier through a sci-fi goggle strapped over one eye.

Three years ago, 1 PWO returned from Bosnia to assist in trials of the now widely used laser simulation equipment which allows more realistic battlefield training.

And the 1st Battalion is unique in its current tour in that the Yorkshire soldiers are the only ones still patrolling in Northern Ireland in berets.

BERETS ABANDONED

At the end of the IRA cease-fire in February troops across the Province were ordered to abandon their berets and return to protected headgear as a security measure. Lt Col Charles Le Brun, CO 1 PWO, explained that when his soldiers arrived in Tyrone during June they asked for permission to wear their berets on patrol.

It was hoped that this would soften the aggressive image of troops on the streets of Dungan and Cookstown.

"It took a bit of pressure, but we were allowed to patrol in berets," said Lt Col Le Brun. "I think it has helped to make members of the public more aware of who we are, and not alarm them to the same extent."

Their current tour means that soldiers of The Prince of Wales's Own have served a total of nearly six years in the Province during the past 25 years. The battalion was the first to be deployed to Londonderry in 1969 when the Royal Ulster Constabulary asked for military support.

Soldiers in the name of God

MEMBERS of the Royal Army Chaplains' Department have served God and their soldiers through war and peace for 200 years. In these pages Gordon Skilling looks at the work of today's padres and finds that little has changed.

THERE are few heathens on the battlefield. At times of extreme stress special men wearing dog collars and small crosses in their lapels are welcome as they move among soldiers, offering support and helping to ease the last moments of life.

The chaplain will bury those who die in battle, whether in victory or defeat. Even if he could escape capture, it is his duty to stay with those taken prisoner. Many have died with the soldiers in their care.

During the First World War, 172 Army chaplains gave their lives, and the department became "royal" in 1919 when King George V recognised the valour and devotion to duty of its members.

Religion can be a difficult subject for soldiers. The sixth commandment says they shall not kill, yet they are asked to fight wars which have religious roots. They operate amid worldwide religious hatred.

But on the eve of battle, or facing the unknown in a prisoner-of-war camp, the most hardened warrior may regain a faith previously ignored in the barrack block.

Killing presents a dilemma for the Army's men of God, but the use of force and the taking of life is justified in certain circumstances to counter terrorism or aggression. The profession of arms is noble and while war is unacceptable in itself, it may be the only solution in an evil world.

A padre's effect on morale can be incalculable. While held as a PoW in Korea, the Glosters' Sam Davies was seen by the Chinese as a political commissar. The more he was persecuted the more the determination of the Glosters stiffened.

Even in captivity, soldiers managed to produce hymn books, chalice and candlesticks for secret baptisms, and the cross carved with two nails by Lt Col Fred Carne VC is now one of the glories of Gloucester Cathedral.

Three roles

In addition to its historic presence in conflict, the Royal Army Chaplains' Department (RACHD) exists to serve soldiers and their families in peace.

Three roles dominate the chaplain's work – minister, teacher, carer. He is primarily a minister of whichever branch of the Christian church licenses him and sends him to the Army.

He remains within the jurisdiction of that church but also comes under either the Chaplain General or Principal Roman Catholic Chaplain.

In the role of teacher, he leads the character-training programmes laid down by the department.

This year the theme is coping with disaster. Within weeks of completing his training a young soldier could find himself witness to devastation and carnage in Bosnia or Rwanda... situations which make a phenomenal demand on the Serviceman's personality and moral resources, and on the chaplains who help him cope.

Soak up fears

Chaplains soak up the fears, anger, stress and turmoil they encounter, often without realising it. It is important that this is managed properly and dealt with professionally.

The third role of the chaplain is as a carer, a pastoral dimension unlimited by office hours; it is often undertaken quietly in the wee small hours during exercises or operations.

Being with soldiers at such times, building trust and respect, sharing their conditions, helps chaplains meet their needs.

The ministry of a chaplain is unique in its breadth and variety. But it can often be very lonely and his own spiritual life has to be strong. While supporting soldiers in difficult situations, these trying circumstances eat into the chaplain's own resources. As soldiers of The Royal Highland Fusiliers helped deal with the aircraft tragedy at Lockerbie, the chaplain was as much involved as the young fusiliers.

Battlefield ministry: soldiers receive communion in the Western Desert during the Second World War

The RACHD is unusual among military units in that it is fully up to its establishment of 147 chaplains. It dates back to September 1796 when a department was formed after the previous system of regimental chaplains had disintegrated.

At first only Church of England chaplains were authorised, but within 40 years Presbyterians, then Roman Catholics, were accepted, the latter independently administered. "Other Protestants" were soon included, and in 1892 the first officiating rabbi was appointed. The rabbi serves the Jewish communities of all three Services. Gurkhas have their own religious leaders, as did Sikhs when they provided formed units to the British Army. Today, if individual Sikhs, Muslims or members of other religions require support, they may turn to a Christian chaplain to find the name and address of the nearest contact.

The first non-Church of England Chaplain General was appointed in 1987 and was succeeded last year by the present incumbent, the Rev Dr Victor Dobbin, first member of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland to hold the post.

The chaplaincy itself shines as a beacon of ecumenism in a religious world riven by historical differences.

Dr Dobbin accepts that church leaders have to be cautious when dealing with doctrinal matters, although this does not affect the day-to-day work of chaplains.

Working together

"At the grass-roots levels of chaplaincy there are few major conflicts which would cause us concern. The denominations work exceptionally well together and ecumenical activities within the Army are very positive, with priests of all denominations sharing services and padres' hours."

Dr Dobbin is convinced it is at this level that ecumenism progresses.

In Bosnia, where three Roman Catholics and 13 other chaplains minister to 10,000 British troops, denominations do not matter. This is the view of Philip Majcher, senior chaplain of 1 Mechanised Brigade, who ministered to the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards during the Gulf War.

He found the link with other dimensions and churches enjoyable – even standing at a Greek Orthodox service in Bosnia which lasted nearly three hours.

Soldiers were by and large religious but careless of faith until they were confronted by it, he said. On operations there was always a dread that something would happen and chaplains could gauge the level of pressure by church attendance.

In his first tour in Bosnia, at the start of Grapple 1 in 1992, Padre Charlie McCartney took part in a service which would have been unthinkable for many in his homeland of Ireland. Although

The Rev Charlie McCartney, who has served in Bosnia with the Royal Engineers, irreverently points out that chaplains are unarmed: a robust sense of humour helps ministers relate to soldiers from a strong Irish Protestant tradition, he accompanied some of his Roman Catholic flock to a Christmas mass in Tomislavgrad.

Chaplain then to 35 Engineer Regiment and the RLC National Support Element, he is now based with the 1st Battalion, The Queen's Lancashire Regiment. He still shudders as he passes a junction in Gornji Vakuf where he was pinned down by cross-fire during a Croat-Muslim battle.

No bullets

His driver at the time had no rounds with which to defend the unarmed padre; he was considered a suicide threat so had not been issued bullets.

Padre McCartney insists that if people remained true to the Christian rules of love and kindness, nobody would pose a threat. "It is not the religious movement that causes the problem, it is the people who interpret the rules to suit themselves," he said.

Bosnia presented particular problems for Roman Catholics. Father Tony Barry covers the whole brigade and clocks up huge mileages travelling over an area covered by four non-conformist chaplains from Gornji Vakuf to Sanski Most.

Having joined the Army last October, he feels almost like an itinerant missionary and found it all a tremendous challenge.

Becoming part of the Army itself was often a severe culture shock to a new padre, said Bob Locke, who accompanied the 2nd Battalion, The Parachute Regiment in Belfast. After deputising for Army chaplains in Colchester while they were on operational tours, he took a short service commission.

He had been saddened to encounter the polarised and politicised outlook in the Province. "Northern Ireland is not a particularly good advert for the church in general and I don't see an easy answer," he said.

A former Chaplain General, the Very Rev Jim Harkness, said: "You do learn that perhaps some of the assumptions and perceptions you had when you came in are not quite as accurate as you once thought they were," said.

"Fundamental ecclesiastical matters remain, but some things which were terribly important really become less important when you find yourself in a situation where you are trying to offer your ministry to people. Invariably, the soldier says 'yes'."

Army's padres in move to tri-Service HQ after half a century at 'royal' home

AFTER nearly 50 years the Royal Army Chaplains' Department has left its temporal home at Bagshot Park, Surrey, for a temporary stay at Netheravon House in Wiltshire.

A formative influence on the opinions and moral standards of padres and soldiers from private to field marshal, the centre near Camberley is estimated by Warden David Tickner to have seen 440,000 visitors pass through since the first chaplains arrived there in 1947, writes Gordon Skilling.

Due to move on September 30, the RACHD Training Centre is now part of the tri-Service Armed Forces Chaplaincy Centre (AFCC). It will continue to provide three basic courses at Netheravon, where it will be partly based before moving to Amport House near Andover.

Amport House, a Grade 2 listed building, was until March 29 the home of the Royal Air Force Chaplains' School. Royal Navy chaplains have trained there since 1962. It is now being extended to accommodate the Army.

Military training

Primary function of the training is to prepare chaplains for their ministry to soldiers serving from Bosnia to Northern Ireland. After more detailed military training at Sandhurst, further instruction throughout their careers prepares them for the level of ability they are expected to carry.

A second aim is to sponsor what is termed "the moral and ethical debate". It is not a "bible-bashing" session.

Soldiers of all persuasions – or none – discuss matters of deep importance in an atmosphere of complete confidentiality which allow more mature opinions on current problems.

Pastoral courses fulfil the third function. These revolve around welfare, and can help women, such as new commanding officers' wives, who have suddenly to assume a welfare role to which they are not accustomed.

The sumptuously-appointed building was the home of the Duke of Connaught, Queen Victoria's third son, and is owned by the Crown Estate.

Bagshot Park was requisitioned during the Second World War for use by the Auxiliary Territorial Service, later to become the Women's Royal Army Corps, as its staff college.

The Queen did her ATS training there and her father, King George VI, offered the house to the Chaplain General in 1946.

Bagshot Park's chapel was built in the 1950s in memory of the 134 British and Commonwealth chaplains who died during the Second World War.

Its museum is probably unique in the military environment for having no weapons or captured enemy equipment on display; instead, simple crosses and rough artefacts made by prisoners of war speak eloquently of soldiers' faith under great stress.

Everything will be taken to the new tri-Service chaplains' centre at Netheravon; even the famous Bagshot pool sign, which warned padres not to walk on the water, will be reincarnated at the gate to the River Avon.

There cannot be many journalists who are able to spend their semi-retirement living comfortably in their own castle, but then Warwick Charlton is no ordinary journalist. In an eventful life he has worked on several national newspapers, written a book on Stephen Ward and the Profumo affair and sailed in a replica of the Mayflower to America.

During the Second World War his publications kept troops of the Eighth Army informed as they fought in the Western Desert, Sicily and Italy. Charlton has a special place in the history of Soldier. Although never actually on the staff he tells here of his role in the birth of the magazine more than half a century ago.

'We couldn't think of another name so we called it Soldier'

WHEN Capt Warwick Charlton strode down the corridor of Montgomery's headquarters in France with the germ of an idea for an Army newspaper he was confident his idea would find favour with the British commander.

After all, Charlton, now 78, was known as the "father of desert newspapers", having founded Crusader – the Eighth Army Weekly, as well as the Tripoli Times and Eighth Army News, and was well-known to Monty who had led the desert army.

Under his arm, Charlton carried a dummy issue which he had put together using scissors and paste, and a few back numbers of Yank!, the illustrated US service magazine. Monty took one look and instantly approved it. Its cover was emblazoned with the masthead, SOLDIER.

"I called it Soldier because of Yank!. I couldn't call it 'British' or 'English', and I couldn't think of another name," said Charlton. "After all, I visualised my reader not as a general, captain or corporal, but as a soldier."

"When I saw Monty, I did not want to present him with a technical publication, more a picture paper in the same vein as Yank!. The whole emphasis of the magazine was that soldiers should regard it as their paper," he explained.

Monty wanted Charlton to edit the new publication and sent him back with the 21st Army Group's chief welfare officer, Col Medlicott, to seek War Office approval for the venture.

Unfortunately for Charlton, a newspaper article about Montgomery's sponsorship of him for the editorship incurred the wrath of the Secretary of State for War, Sir James Grigg, who vetoed Charlton's appointment.

Grigg had taken a dislike to the journalists who had written the piece and said that if he was to judge Charlton by his friends he would be quite right to stop him having anything to do with a newspaper...

Monty backed down and Charlton was posted to Mountbatten's South East Asia Command (SEAC) headquarters. Responsibility for Soldier passed to others and the magazine was launched in March 1945.

Until this disappointment, Charlton's rise had been meteoric. The son of a journalist, he began his career while still at boarding school, writing letters to a newspaper that paid for correspondence. He got a job on the Daily Sketch and later the Sunday Dispatch, before joining the Royal Fusiliers in 1940.

"Having been a cadet at school, I was appointed as a sergeant instructor," explained Charlton, who was eventually commissioned and posted to the Middle East.

"To kill time, I put together a small magazine of poems and writings called ME (Middle East). Randolph Churchill saw it and asked me to join the new Eighth Army, then being formed, to start a news service to keep troops informed."

"I wanted to start a proper newspaper which could be printed in Cairo and flown to the front line but the RAF weren't keen on the idea. Randolph sent a message to his father, Winston, saying that the Royal Air Force was not being supportive. They soon changed their minds."

Randolph Churchill sent him to Tobruk, under siege by the German Afrika Korps, to gather stories.

"I went in with Gen Sikorski and 40 British troops on the destroyer, HMS Kipling. The general told me we would be dive-bombed as we neared the port. I asked him what I should tell the men.

"Sikorski said we were to lie on our backs on deck and fire back with our rifles. 'Would that do any good?', I asked. He said no, but the troops wouldn't know that."

When Charlton got back from Tobruk, Gen Neil Ritchie had taken command of the Eighth Army, and the young officer-journalist was tasked to write a story telling soldiers about their new chief.

Ever the opportunist, he told Ritchie that the previous commander had considered establishing a newspaper for troops in the desert. It could be printed on captured mobile presses and he, Charlton, needed only the general's authority to produce a dummy issue. This was given and Charlton persuaded the editor of Parade in Cairo to print several thousand copies of Crusader for distribution throughout the Eighth Army.

The new weekly publication, supported with pictures and copy from the Army Film and Photographic Unit, was a great success.

Intelligence officers gave Charlton captured German diaries and he wrote a regular column, Through Enemy Eyes, in which he described life and war in the desert from a German point of view.

Once, he put a German prisoner in British uniform and kept him for nearly three weeks. The prisoner wrote accounts of where the British were going wrong with their battle techniques.

A daily, Eighth Army News, was added to the stable and printed on any available paper, including the backs of captured Italian maps. It carried news from home, regular updates on the battle, pin-ups, views of home, and a page of letters.

Eighth Army News campaigned strongly against the introduction of cheap "V" cigarettes from India which were provided to troops. "Someone must have been making millions of pounds from the deal. They were terrible," Charlton remembered.

"I asked my letters editor, Haig Gudenian (later on the staff of Soldier) to smoke them regularly and undergo a daily medical. The paper carried reports on the damage being done to Haig's health. Eventually the cigarette ration was stopped and we had to campaign for its reinstatement."

Charismatic Monty

Events in the North Africa moved fast. "Ritchie was fired and Auchinleck took over for a time before being replaced by Montgomery. I will never forget when he arrived. He was charismatic and brought us all together. He didn't have a wide vocabulary, but he used it well."

"He told his troops that there was no such thing as not being in battle, whether they were headquarters staff, front-line soldiers or cooks."

Charlton and Montgomery's public relations officer, Maj Geoffrey Keating, were involved in discussions to change the general's choice of headgear from the standard cap with its distinctive red band.

Monty tried an Australian digger hat with badges of units attached to the upturned brim, but it did not suit his rather foxy face. Eventually, he settled on a black beret with two badges and was taken into the desert to be photographed in the turret of a tank.

"We had not been there long when German 88mm fire started. They sounded like underground trains as they came over and were very intimidating."

"Monty's staff started worrying about him posing for photographs under fire, but Geoffrey Keating suggested that the general should stay in the turret until a shell exploded in the background as it would look better."

NCOs of a rifle regiment's anti-tank company are interviewed by the editor of Crusader after the action

Warwick Charlton today outside his Hampshire castle with Ollie

It did, and when Keating's film was developed, an explosion could plainly be seen."

After the great advance from El Alamein, the general gave Charlton authority to take over any printing presses he might find in Tripoli.

"We got there, smartly, in time to prevent them being smashed and looted," recalled Charlton. "Within 24 hours we had published the first issue of The Tripoli Times."

"The paper had a real coup. It was a newspaper man's dream. We followed Prime Minister Winston Churchill as he toured British units and were able to present him with a full report of his visit – pictures and all – before he departed."

A member of the Ministry of Information who accompanied Churchill noted that the Army's only newspaper was published by the Eighth Army. As a result, the Union Jack newspaper was created and another Army officer, Hugh Cudlipp (now Lord Cudlipp), was appointed to edit it.

Charlton and Keating subsequently took part in the invasion of Sicily. He was tasked to start an Italian paper to keep the civilian population informed. Black marketeering was rife and he published a list of official prices for goods. When these were largely ignored, he donned a red armband and pretended to arrest shopkeepers for overcharging.

Moving to Bari, on the Italian mainland, Charlton realised that people in Britain were supporting Gen Michailovitch in Yugoslavia who had backed the Germans.

"I sent one of my journalists to interview a partisan leader called Josip Broz ... better known as Tito."

"He sent back a series of articles and, as a result of our coverage, Parliament changed its mind and switched its support from Michailovitch to Tito."

When Warwick Charlton was demobilised, he took a job with the Daily Express and then joined the BBC. But he never forgot the magazine he created but never edited – Soldier, the British Army magazine.

Handy work: Rfn Anod Thapa gives the brass drum a final shine

SOLDIERS from the 3rd Battalion, The Royal Gurkha Rifles have made their final appearance on Public Duties in London before the battalion is disbanded in November.

More than 100 Gurkhas carried out a series of 48-hour guards at Buckingham Palace, St James's Palace and the Tower of London.

The Public Duties Company was based on B Company, 3 RGR and was commanded on separate parades by Maj Neil Stevens and Maj James Robinson. Final guard mounting was commanded by the battalion's 2iC, Maj Gerard Hughes.

Created under the final part of the Options for Change restructuring, 3 RGR is probably the shortest-lived battalion to have done Public Duties as the Queen's Guard.

It was created on July 1, 1994 when the 10th Princess Mary's Own Gurkha Rifles was retitled as 3 RGR on the formation of The Royal Gurkha Rifles.

In November, its soldiers will be made redundant, transferred to the 1st or 2nd Battalions of The Royal Gurkha Rifles, or sent to the Gurkha Reinforcement Companies being attached to the 2nd Battalion, The Parachute Regiment, the Royal Scots and The Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment.

At the same time, 1 RGR is being transferred from Hong Kong to Church Crookham to take over 3 RGR's role with 5 Airborne Brigade.

Suez battle cry on approach to anniversary

IT IS a pity that Mr Gavin did not check his facts before he suggested (Letters, Sept 16) that I was "flogging a dead horse" over our quest for a medal for the Suez Canal Zone Emergency, 1951-54.

King George VI did declare there would be no further consideration of awards for the 1939-45 war, hence the rejection of Mr Gavin's request for recognition of Kohima.

The Suez Canal Zone case has not been rejected on statutory grounds, in fact the Army Board in its 1991-92 review stated: "Although now some time ago, it is not debarred by any statute or limitations."

So as I said in the August 5 issue, the battle is still on and I suggest veterans recognize the 45th anniversary on October 16 of the attack by terrorists on the Naafi in Ismailia after the Egyptian Government abrogated the Suez Canal Zone treaty of 1936, by writing to their MPs reminding them that the GOC MELF, Gen Sir Brian Robertson, asked the War Office for a medal for his troops in their fight against Egyptian terrorists and this was rejected on diplomatic grounds which ceased to be a valid excuse with the invasion of Suez in November 1956.

Veterans battle on. — Col P S Newton, Winchester, Hants.

Gunner regiment was not in Korea

IN response to J B Evans (Letters, Sept 2), I can say: "No mate, your memory is not playing tricks, 19 Field Regiment, Royal Artillery did not serve in Korea."

But 170 Independent Mortar Battery, fully independent in Korea, was regimented with 45 Field Regiment, replacing 116 Battery in 1954, having been awarded the honour title "Imjin".

On April 7, 1993, at Paderborn in Germany, 45 Field Regiment was placed in suspended animation due to the reduction in our Armed Forces.

However, 170 Battery lives on, having been amalgamated with 25 Battery of 19 Regiment RA. The current title of my old Korea battery is 25/170 (Imjin) Battery RA. — Jim Jacobs, Fareham, Hants.

For the record ...

Goose Green

In the letter from Michael Meadmore headed "Falklands film was 'unfair' to Col H, VC" (Sept 2) the title of the film should have read The Battle of Goose Green, not Falklands Battlefield Tour. An error of transcription resulted in Cpl Abols being quoted as saying "He [Col H] went round the the right . . ." instead of "We went round the right". This unfortunate change of meaning is regretted.

Pace of change

WHAT a pity the cameraman was allowed to take a posed picture of Guards NCOs using the pace stick (Newsline, Aug 19). It might satisfy the readers of a national daily, but your readership deserves better when expertise is being demonstrated. To mention just one item, the pace sticks appear to be overtaking the users.

Let's go back to Number Ones

LOOKING at the tremendous sight of the pictures of the Sovereign's Parade and of 29 Commando Regiment, Royal Artillery (Soldier, Sept 2), is it not time officially to reinstate No 1 Dress to the British Army?

Indeed, since it was 1960 when the formal attire of our soldiers was last updated, is it not time to review No 2 Dress?

Our soldiers are the most important asset our Army possesses. Tremendous developments have taken place in the combat uniform and equipment, but the formal side seems to have been left behind.

'Mad Jack'

Q: Your reference to the naming of the Churchill Club at the Joint Services Mountain Training Centre at Camp Morfa, Gwynedd (Diary, Sept 2) reminded me that as a boy soldier in 1956-57 I attended a course at the Army Outward Bound School there, where I was lectured to by Lt Col Jack Churchill, who always seemed to wear a kilt.

Three of the miners escaped but Hackett chose to stay with a badly wounded colleague and was crushed by a second fall of clay. His sacrifice was recognised by the award of a posthumous Victoria Cross.

Signpost to Hell found in cupboard

AN original "Hellfire Corner" signboard from Ypres has been donated to the National Army Museum in Chelsea by a relative of the man who took it home at the end of the First World War.

Having rescued the battered signpost from its position on the notorious Menin Road, Lt William Storie displayed it in a shop window in Princes Street, Edinburgh, where he lived.

It eventually disappeared into the back of a cupboard at the family home and was recovered only last year, still in the original canvas cover in which it had been transported from France.

Thousands of troops marched past the board on their way to the trenches as it marked a busy junction on the road from Ypres to the Front.

Many thought they would never return.

"Hellfire Corner" itself was a particularly dangerous place throughout the war. Within easy range of German positions, it had enemy guns trained on it constantly and earned its nickname because it was heavily and frequently shelled.

Although large poles with hessian were put up to obscure the German gunners' view of troop movements, they were almost always sure of hitting something on the road.

In the spring offensive of 1918 the Germans, set on capturing Ypres, got as far as Hellfire Corner before being repulsed.

Fast food at Sennelager

THOUSANDS of soldiers will remember the inadequate and dingy "Cheshire" kitchen they encountered at Sennelager.

The good news is that it has been completely rebuilt at a cost of £2.3 million and is now reckoned to be the most modern kitchen in the British Army. Work was finished a month ahead of schedule thanks to some excellent co-operation by local contractors.

Of the overall cost, £1.3 million went on technical and cooking equipment, and the facility is now capable of producing 2,000 meals, or feeding between 500 and 800 hungry soldiers in the space of just 90 minutes.

The Mayor of Paderborn, Herr Wilhem Lücke, and the Commander Training Support Command (Germany), Brig Tresham Gregg, formally opened the kitchen and sampled the first meal.

Herr Lücke said it was so good he now understood why the morale of British troops was always so high.

Adopt a Gurkha veteran appeal

AN APPEAL has been made for individuals and units to "adopt" thousands of elderly and destitute Gurkhas who fought for Britain in the Second World War, Malaya, Borneo and later conflicts.

Most are too old to provide for themselves and their families.

They depend on a monthly welfare pension of £10 provided by the Gurkha Welfare Trust, a charitable organisation which supports 10,000 former Gurkhas and their widows living in Nepal.

The trust scheme caters mainly for Gurkhas who joined up in the Second World War or who were made redundant during the 1960s and did not serve long enough to qualify for a Service pension.

Now the trust is asking for sponsors to "sign up" and meet the cost of an individual pension under an "adopt-a-Gurkha" scheme.

By covenanting a payment of £10 per month, the Gurkha Welfare Trust can ensure a welfare pension is paid to a named individual on a sponsor's behalf.

It is possible to "sign up" an old soldier (or his widow) from a regiment or corps with which the sponsor has special affinity. The trust will provide the name and service details, and, where possible, a photograph of the person being sponsored.

Individuals or units wishing to sign up should apply for sponsorship and deed of covenant forms to: Gurkha Welfare Trust, Third Floor, 88 Baker Street, London W1M 2AX. Tel: 0171-707 1925; fax 0171-707 1929.

Heather was all fired up for VIP marksman

FIRING point officer SSgt Heather Gaughan found herself in charge of an expert when the president of the Army Cadet Force Association visited Army cadets from Warwickshire and West Midlands at their annual camp on Otterburn training area.

Gen Sir Peter de la Billière accepted an invitation to shoot alongside the cadets while watching them firing .22 rifles on the 30m range.

Heather, the ACF detachment commander at Tile Hill, Coventry, was impressed by the general's score, even though his shots were intended only to zero in the weapon.

Sir Peter met many of the 330 cadets engaged in field exercises and adventurous training.

In brief

Collecting Metal Shoulder Titles by Ray Westlake. The collector's bible, updated 16 years after it was first published. All you ever wanted to know about metal titles worn by units of the Regular Army, Militia, Yeomanry, Volunteers, Territorials and Cadets, with almost 2,000 photographs, packed into 200 pages. Pen & Sword, hardback, £19.95.

The Scottish Regiments by Diana M Henderson. Territorial Army officer's colourful and informative survey, described by the Duke of Edinburgh in his foreword as a "lively and interesting history", has been revised and updated and fully reflects the amalgamations and other changes of the early 1990s. HarperCollins, paperback, £9.99.

The Independent Highland Companies 1603-1760 by Peter Simpson. This former officer of the Black Watch has applied thorough research methods to produce a detailed account of a crucial period in Scottish military history. John Donald Publishers Ltd, Edinburgh; paperback, £15.

Gunfire Target: Six Years with the Royal Artillery by Edward A Oates. Second World War gunner's personal tribute to the infantrymen of the 4th Indian Division who fought alongside the Royal Artillery. The Book Guild Ltd, hardback, £15.95.

A Sapper's War by Leonard Watkins. Straight-from-the-hip stuff telling the brutal truth about life as "one of the ranks" during the Second World War. Full marks for courage and honesty. Minerva Press, paperback, £8.99.

Arrogance on the Battlefield: A Primary Cause of Defeat by J Lee Ready. Case studies from 1755 (Braddock in America) to the Gulf War show how over-confidence in human resources or equipment can lead to failure. Arms & Armour, hardback, £25.

V for Schweik: Ten Stories of World War II by Eric Davidson. Brief, moving and humorous tales evoking the spirit of the ordinary soldier. Little, Brown, paperback, £6.99.

SAS Gulf Warriors by Steve Crawford. Claims to paint a "remarkably vivid picture" of "what SAS operations were really like behind Iraqi lines". Simon & Schuster, large-format paperback, £12.99.

The Brylcreem Boy by Bob Freeman. For those who enjoyed Bob's autobiographical The Soldier Boy (reviewed in our June 24 issue) this sequel tells in similar ebullient vein of his days as an RAF erk. George Mann Books of Maidstone, paperback, £6.95 (UK only).

Like Bond, this is absolutely fabulous

DID Martin Bormann, Hitler's private secretary, die in Berlin in 1945 – or had he by then been spirited away to England, with a new identity?

What strikes the reviewer first about Op JB: The Last Great Secret of the Second World War, which argues the latter case apparently from a position of authority, is that the author, publisher and even the PR people seem to go out of their way to sow seeds of doubt about its credibility.

It is worth bearing in mind that Op JB is an abbreviation for "Operation James Bond". Indeed, 007's creator, Ian Fleming, who took the Bond name from an ornithologist, plays a leading role in this "fabulous" tale of cloak-and-dagger derring-do. To Fleming is accredited the code-name Pooh; Churchill was Tigger and Hitler, Rabbit.

Bormann, allegedly wanted alive because he alone had access to the Nazi loot stashed away in numbered Swiss bank accounts, was Piglet.

The author, Christopher Creighton (code-name Christopher Robin, real name John Christopher Ainsworth-Davis, actor, writer, director, musician, Second World War secret intelligence officer), starts his preface: "I am well aware that many readers will find this story incredible.

"All I can say is that I have done my best to write the truth about an operation which took place more than 50 years ago and of which – by its very nature – few records survive."

Creighton, who says

Martin Bormann

Churchill, Mountbatten and Fleming urged him to write the story at an appropriate time, ends the preface: "I repeat: this is my personal story; it is not a history, and I claim nothing."

In a press release accompanying the book, the PR people say: "If it is true and Martin Bormann really was brought out of Germany in a top secret

Op JB: The Last Great Secret of the Second World War by Christopher Creighton, Simon & Schuster, hardback, £14.99.

The Hunt for Martin Bormann: The Truth by Charles Whiting. Leo Cooper Pen & Sword Paperback, £9.95.

commando raid . . . then this is the most important untold story of the Second World War.

"Equally, if it is a mere fabrication . . . this fantastic story can be read as a masterly piece of fiction.

"Bormann was allegedly secreted down the waterways of northern Germany in a raid approved by Churchill, King George VI and President Roosevelt.

"Sadly, it seems doubtful whether we will ever know the truth of this bizarre story. It certainly beggars belief that Bormann ended up living just a couple of hours' drive from Churchill's own home at Chartwell, yet war does so often throw up the strange and unbelievable."

In a separate preface the publisher, Simon and Schuster, says it has not been able to verify the author's account by independent research.

"In the end, readers will have to make their own judgments about what they believe. What is not in doubt is that this book is a thrilling story from a remarkable man."

It is no coincidence that Charles Whiting's story of Bormann, first published in America in 1973, has been brought out in a revised paperback edition by Leo Cooper.

The publicity for The Hunt for Martin Bormann: The Truth refers to Op JB and asks: "Is this yet another in a long line of 'so-called sightings'?"

Whiting, who has researched the Bormann story and interviewed the leading participants in all the hunts since 1945, has no doubt about what happened and makes no bones about it.

No bones, that is, apart from recording that a skeleton found in Berlin in 1972 was identified as that of Bormann. There was evidence that cyanide had been taken. – CH

Somme guide passes test

TONIE and Valmai Holt are convincing guides to the major battlefields of the First World War.

Their latest book, Major & Mrs Holt's Battlefield Guide to the Somme, is a definitive guide for visitors to the region.

Tonie, a professional soldier for 20 years, and Valmai, an expert on the writers and artists of the war, have put together four interesting itineraries for the battlefield traveller.

Major & Mrs Holt's Battlefield Guide to the Somme by Tonie and Valmai Holt. Leo Cooper, paperback, £12.95.

Illustrated in colour, the guide contains a wealth of detail on the war cemeteries, memorials and preserved trenches of the Somme.

Stories of heroism and tragedy are interwoven with information to help the visitor.

This reviewer used the guide during a recent pilgrimage. It was a useful research aid and reference source. And its accuracy was never in doubt. – LJM

PEACE BE WITH YOU

Even if you feel a gun in your back . . .

SHOULD anyone be deluded that the life of a typical British Army chaplain is anything less than eventful, the schedule of the Rev Ian Evans during one week in September 1995 will disprove the theory.

The life led by Fr Evans and other priests in former Yugoslavia is described in The Cross on the Sword: Catholic Chaplains in the Forces as "one of prayer, sacraments, talking with 'the lads' and movement between outposts."

The "lads" in Ian's care were cavalry, engineers, signallers, infantry, medics and loggies. For some, especially in outlying detachments, he was their only visitor.

Although ostensibly based at Split on the Adriatic, the chaplain would sleep in five different places every week during a six-month operational tour.

A weekly parish round involved "a drive of almost 900 kilometres of dangerous routes, in most places little more than mountain mule-tracks improved by Royal Engineers, snow-bound in winter, always requiring driving skill and constant vigilance."

In the documentary style of the book its authors, Tom Johnstone and Dr James Hagerty, then fill in the details in Fr Evans's own words.

East of Gornji Vakuf, he is taking pictures of a desecrated church when he is yelled at by a militiaman wielding an AK-47.

"I turned my camera on him and he disappeared, or so I thought. On my way out of the building I felt the muzzle of a rifle on my shoulder pushing me out the door.

"I shouted to my driver . . . I tried calmly to walk away but I must admit to waiting to hear

At the front: Father Martin Caddell, a Roman Catholic priest, worships with British troops serving in Bosnia the sound of his AK-47 . . . we drove away and then he 'opened-up' over the roof of the Land Rover".

Military clerics have rarely been very far away from gunfire or, before that, the clash of swords on armour and the sound of arrows flying through the air. As the Rt Rev Francis Walmsley, Bishop-in-Ordinary to HM Forces, points out in his foreword, priests accompanied the Crusades and chaplains were present at Crecy and Agincourt.

The Cross on the Sword: Catholic Chaplains in the Forces by Tom Johnstone and James Hagerty. Published by Geoffrey Chapman, hardback £40, paperback £19.99.

In more recent times many Roman Catholic chaplains, Irish as well as British, have been decorated for valour under fire and many have died in action.

Set against the broad sweep of history, the Royal Army Chaplains' Department itself is a mere youngster at just 200 years old.

In 338 pages Johnstone and Hagerty cover much if not all of the ministry of Catholic chaplains over those two centuries, with sections devoted to all the major conflicts up to and including the Gulf.

Their book's wealth of detail and documentation proclaim a feat of dedication and research which succeeds admirably as a chronicle and tribute in this bicentennial year. – CH

Recognition for Rats of Tobruk

NOTES on the dust-jacket of Tobruk: The Great Siege Reassessed imply a new look at the battle in which the Desert Rats and Montgomery tasted victory against Rommel.

It's not really that at all, but another view of how the tide was turned in North Africa as Rommel and the Afrika Korps were expelled out of the theatre in May 1943.

It is also a plea for recognition on behalf of the brave soldiers of Britain's 70th division.

Frank Harrison was one of four signalmen left behind as HQ Signals to a tank brigade during the retreat from Tobruk, and it's pretty obvious from his description of events leading up to, during and beyond the longest siege in British military history that he had been burning to write his assessment ever since.

The author says he has written the book because the role of the British 70th Division in defending the Tobruk corridor has never been fully recognized for its heroism.

He asks: "Why is it one division [the Australian 9th] was lauded, and the other ignored?"

His answer is another question: "Could it be because the first belonged to the Australian Imperial Army, whose nation recognises its heroes, while the second was composed of British county and regional regiments which have always been taken for granted by its nation?"

A strong claim, but he sets out to boost 70 Div's place in history with his account and "to redress the balance; to place the British 70th Division where it belongs – on the plinth alongside the Australian 9th Division, as joint heroes of the siege and break-out at Tobruk". – JM

CONDITIONS OF ACCEPTANCE – CLASSIFIED ADVERTISEMENTS

All classified advertisements are accepted on a prepaid basis only, and are subject to the following conditions.

The Publishers reserve the right to decline any copy material of which they may not approve whether an order shall have been accepted or not. All advertisements are accepted subject to approval and conditionally upon space being available. The Publishers reserve the right to make any alteration they consider necessary or desirable in an advertisement to meet their approval. The Publishers also reserve the right to cancel or suspend any advertisement without stating a reason.

While every endeavour will be made to meet the wishes of advertisers, the Publishers do not guarantee the insertions of any particular advertisement.

The Publishers shall not be liable for any loss or damage occasioned by any total or partial failure (however caused) of publication or distribution of any edition in which any advertisement is scheduled to appear.

The Publishers shall not be liable for errors occurring after the first insertion of an advertisement in a series. It is the responsibility of the advertiser to inform the Publishers of any such error in sufficient time to allow amendment. A voucher copy will not be supplied.

Advertisements will be placed under the following headings:

Accommodation, Business Opportunities, Cars, Cars Wanted, Entertainment, Exhibitions, For Sale, Gift Services, Holidays, Houselets, Notices, Property for Sale, Reunions, Services, Situations Vacant, Situations Wanted, Training, Wanted. Other headings will be applied if deemed acceptable by the Publishers.

The placing of an order for the insertion of an advertisement shall amount to an acceptance of the above conditions and any conditions stipulated by an agency or advertiser shall be void insofar as they are in conflict with them.

Roller role: Marilyn Avery hard at work on the pitch at Aldershot

Picture: Mike Weston

Wicket maiden

MARILYN Avery is an unsung heroine.

In mid-September, as head groundsman at Aldershot's Army cricket ground, she saw the last of many wickets she has painstakingly prepared this season put to use.

"It has been nerve-racking, but on the whole there have not been too many complaints, and people have been very supportive," said Marilyn, a staff member for six years but in her first season in the post.

"The main problem has been the weather, with the heavy rain affecting some of the wickets. It is very hard work, it can be demanding and stressful, but there is an awful lot of job satisfaction."

Being a groundsman is not just a question of mowing a strip of grass, she pointed out. There is also scarification – soil loosening – rolling and cutting, to take some examples.

"It takes me ten days of daily work to prepare a wicket before a game, and of course one is governed by the weather," said Marilyn, who worked at Aldershot Military Stadium 15 years ago before starting a family.

Following on the heels of former head groundsman

SPORTING PROFILE

Frank Vincent – a fixture with the MoD for more than 40 years – people were initially "a bit surprised" at the idea of a female in the post, she told Soldier, but she feels she is now becoming more and more accepted.

Marilyn's recurring nightmare is of wickets starting to break up in the middle, or being marked up wrongly.

But her best memories of the season have been the occasions when players have come up to her after a game to say: "That was a good wicket, thanks very much."

She sometimes watches Test matches on television, but admits she is usually more interested in looking at the state of the pitch – especially when Geoff Boycott carries out his preliminary examinations.

With one season under her belt, she said, she is growing in confidence.

Shortly, she and her newly-appointed teenaged male assistant will put the cricket tables to bed and start preparing the hockey, football and rugby pitches for the winter season.

Army cricket secretary Maj Rupert Ross-Hurst paid tribute to Marilyn's efforts. "In a difficult season the wickets at Aldershot have been first-rate. Visiting players have commented on how good they have been," he said.

'Stoke step into the breach

Army 4, Basingstoke Town 0

BASINGSTOKE Town sent a strong reserve side to the Military Stadium for the Army's opening football fixture, following a late withdrawal by Uxbridge due to injury problems, writes Derrick Bly.

From the kick-off, a defensive mistake let in LBdr Lee Bluck who slammed the ball past 'keeper Drake to give the Army the lead inside a minute.

At the other end, a rare mistake by SSgt Alan Higgin was rescued by a timely tackle from LSgt Pat Fagin. Then Sig Joe Collins hammered a right-foot shot from 25 yards that was palmed onto the crossbar and away to safety. Army goalkeeper Cfn Ian Elliott had to make two good saves as the game developed.

Collins and Bluck broke down the right and the latter's pinpoint cross was met by skipper WO2 Kevin Parkins who was thwarted by a bad bounce.

Two new boys at full back, LCpl Eugene Shannon and Tpr Paul Swain, had impressive debuts.

On the half-time whistle, the Army scored a second when Town were caught square and Collins converted the chance.

LCpl Bob Hope replaced Shannon for the second half and put in a superb cross which was headed over by Bluck, but in the 63rd minute the Army increased their lead when Bluck scored a superb individual goal after picking up the ball near the halfway line.

Coach QMSI Pat Russell brought on Cpl John Butler for Elliott in goal, and Cpl Wayne McHugh and Sig Johnstone and Sig Russell were also introduced.

It was McHugh who put the game beyond doubt when he controlled a through-ball and hit an unstoppable shot.

This was a good opening performance by a new-look Army side and coach Russell can be pleased with a squad featuring seven new faces.

Army 0, Camberley Town 1

Camberley Town from the ICIS League provided lively opposition for the Army squad's second match in 24-hours.

From the kick-off, their team-work, speed and commitment bore the hall-mark of a side which has made a successful start to the new season.

Sig Joe Collins had an eventful evening, being drafted into the central defence to replace LSgt Pat Fagin and the injured Sgt Tony Wright. He picked up a yellow card in six minutes for a hand-ball offence and, with 15 minutes to go, was carried off with a foot injury after a strong challenge.

The Army team showed seven changes from the team that started against Basingstoke the previous night, with new boys LCpl Paul Sibbring and Paul Swain's brother Lee joining him in the full back slots, the first time brothers had played for the Army for many years.

The first half was end-to-end, with WO2 Kevin Parkins providing a half-chance for LCpl Glenister and Cpl Wayne McHugh having his effort saved.

Camberley brought good saves for goalkeeper Pte Kevin Murray.

After the break, Cpl Alfie Alford, Pte Maskell and Cpl Zoldan replaced McHugh, Johnstone and Lee Swain.

Camberley also made changes, but the Army had the edge in the early stages and Camberley keeper Gray was forced to save efforts from Maskell and Glenister.

In injury time, the visitors broke away, caught the Army defence out of position and scored the only goal of the game.

Lottery speeds US hockey tour

LATEST round of Army Sports Lottery grants includes £3,600 towards the cost of the Army Women's Hockey Association tour of America.

There is also £1,500 towards the irrigation of the Royal Military College of Science golf course and £200 for an anemometer for the Dhekelia Sailing Club in Cyprus.

The list of successful applications was shorter than normal because the volume of bids has been lower.

Rules for the awarding of grants have been updated, and can be found in DCI (Army) 45/96.

Individual applicants are expected to subscribe to the lottery.

Latest edition of the league table of punters reveals that although 1st (UK) Armoured Division Signal Regiment has more personnel signed up than any other unit, 112, its figure includes all units in Herford.

As a result, 1st The Queen's Dragoon Guards is judged the top individual unit. It has 86 soldiers registered with the scheme.

Quids in at Otterburn

Otterburn Training Area Commandant Lt Col Mike Bradley (right) hands over a cheque for £5,000 to Maj Gen Simon Lytle, Director Army Sport Control Board, at Aldershot. The second such donation this year, the money was raised from profits made by the training area's PRI funds. A similar amount has been donated to the Army Benevolent Fund.

REME hang on in there

FOR the first time for several years, the weather during the annual Inter-Service hang gliding championships – held this year at Crickhowell, south Wales – was so poor that flying was only possible on three days, and the competition had to be extended.

The results for the Army team were a mixed bag, operations and other commitments meaning that the open and intermediate classes were poorly attended, but two surprise entries and some good flying in the novice class promised a return to glory for the team in future years.

In the open class, some steady flying in each task made WO2 Phil Freeman from 72 Ac Wksp REME the Army champion. Due to work commitments, Sgt Mark Lewis of SEAE Arborfield and Capt James McMenemy (ATSA Blandford) could only fly on two days, and finished way behind. All three are in the same corps, so not surprisingly REME won the inter-Corps Trophy.

Disappointment in the open class was more than compensated for by Maj Geoge Shapland of RSA Larkhill storming from behind to win two tasks in the intermediate category.

He was placed third and awarded the Jim Taggart Trophy for the most improved pilot, with LCpl Shane Probert RE, LCpl Mark Brennen, 3 Regt AAC and Sgt Steve Brown AAC backing him up in fourth, fifth and sixth places. WO1 Martin Colclough APTC was placed tenth. Most of them are expected to be in the open class next year.

In the novice class, two AAC pilots, WO2 Kev Kinton and Sgt Steven Swain, were placed first and second and will compete in the intermediate class in the 1997 event.

Map-makers get home in tight finish

AN exciting finish to the Army Minor Units cricket cup final at Aldershot ended with 29 Regiment RLC failing by just four runs to overtake 42 Survey Engineer Group RE's score.

Put in to bat, the Hermitage-based map-makers scored 164, with fine batting by Stamp and Parnell well supported by the rest of the top order.

But their final score was less than it might have been when the last six batsmen failed to reach double figures in the face of some terrific bowling and fielding by the loggies. Burcham and Roberts took seven of the ten wickets between them.

The 29 Regiment batting was held together by Pte Roberts, whose innings of 65 nearly won the match for them.

When he was out with 20 left to win, the loggies were in control, but a wonderful catch by Parker virtually sealed the match.

This well-supported and sporting match was a fine advertisement for Army cricket at unit level.

Welsh awards

Territorial Army soldier Pte Peter Brown (4 Kings Own Border) is making his mark in the tough world of Enduro motor-cycle racing. He won the best Services and best Army rider awards at the Welsh Two-Day Enduro event at Llandrindod Wells and is in the top ten of his class in the British championships.

Army divers sweep the board

ARMY divers have had an outstanding season, highlighted by good wins in the Inter-Services and Combined Services events.

The season began with the Army diving championships at Ponds Forge Pool in Sheffield, where a poor turnout did not reflect on the performance of the competitors.

In the men's senior springboard, the three stalwarts battled it out for the top slot, with LCpl Neil Wilson (4 AAC) proving he was on top form.

He established a lead over Lt Christiaan Munro (2 RTR) and SSgt (SSI) Amos Greenfield (MTW(G)) who finished second and third respectively.

The top places in the men's senior highboard involved the same three divers, but with Munro pulling through in the last two rounds to win from Wilson and Greenfield.

In a repeat of last year's championship, Sgt Amanda Davies (MCTC) won off both boards, scoring 164.85 in the springboard and 139.25 in the highboard. Cpl Paula Rowan (ATR Pirbright) finished close behind.

In the men's intermediate event, LCpls Ian Rider (1 Staffords) and Phil Minns (8 Inf Bde) and Kgn Dave Cox (1 Kings) fought it out for gold with some interesting dives.

Cox dominated the event, leaving Minns and Rider trailing behind.

Cpl Nicola Brown learned five new dives in two days for the women's intermediate event. She used three of them for the first time in the competition and scored a respectable 83.85 points.

Following the championships, the squad spent two weeks training under Olympic coach Mike Edge, perfecting familiar dives and learning new ones in preparation for the Inter-Services at Portsmouth.

A confident Army team duly swept the board. Wilson and Greenfield took first and second places in both the men's highboard and springboard, while Davies and Rowan finished first and third in both of the women's events.

All four were selected for the Combined Services team which went on to beat the Civil Service and Police in the annual triangular match.
