The Royal Tour of Northern Ireland

The royal arrival at Hillsborough Castle at the start of the Jubilee visit to Northern Ireland.

At Hillsborough, where a garden party was held in her honour, the Queen speaks to Major Shirley Nield, Women's Royal Army Corps.

The Queen inspects a Guard of Honour of men of the Ulster Defence Regiment at Hillsborough Castle.

During the Hillsborough garden party, the Duke of Edinburgh stops to talk to soldiers.

The Silver Jubilee Review of the Army

After lunch the Queen went 'walkabout' and met many of the officers and men and their families.

Major-General Nigel Bagnall, commander of the Sennelager parade and General Officer Commanding 4th Division, escorts the royal Range-Rover in a tracked armoured personnel carrier.

The Queen takes the salute as armoured ambulances drive past.

After firing the royal salute over the plains of Germany, E Battery, Royal Horse Artillery, drives off.

The Colour Party of The Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders marches past.

The Queen's Royal Irish Hussars dip the guns of their Chieftain tanks in salute to the monarch.

A proud moment for a Rhine Army soldier and his wife as the Queen stops for a chat.

A colour-sergeant and his Colours await the royal arrival at Sennelager.

A salute from the skies by a free fall parachutist.

The only drum horse on parade—Dettingen of The Queen's Own Hussars.

The finale of the Army's tribute to the Queen. Gazelle helicopters swoop overhead as Scorpions of 16th/5th The Queen's Royal Lancers thunder past the saluting base with barrels dipped.

General Sir Frank King talks to the Queen on her departure from Sennelager at the end of her review.

The Duke of Edinburgh—himself an accomplished pilot—takes a second look at some of Rhine Army's Gazelle and Scout helicopters.

General Sir Roland Gibbs shares a joke with the Duke of Edinburgh as they step into the open Range-Rover.

The Queen talks earnestly to one of her soldiers serving her in Germany.
