Welsh Guardsmen from Support Company, Milan Platoon prepare to fight a fire at a derelict school in Edgehill

Army fireman averts tanker fire disaster

A WELSH Guardsman has been put forward for an award after averting disaster by driving a petrol tanker away from a dangerous fire he and his colleagues were tackling while providing emergency cover during industrial action by Fire Services on Merseyside.

Gdsm Lee Rogers was a member of one of three Green Goddess crews called to fight a huge blaze in a warehouse in Bootle. When the fire-fighting guardsmen arrived, 50-gallon oil and paint drums were exploding amid stacks of burning pallets, sending sheets of fire over a wide area. Flames were reaching 150ft into the air.

Gdsm Rogers, a member of the MT Platoon, immediately climbed into the tanker and drove it to safety.

He did not know at the time if the tanker was full or empty, but all involved in the incident were acutely aware of the risk and the additional danger posed by gas cylinders in an adjoining garage. It transpired that the tanker was, in fact, full.

Divisional Fire Officer Peter Uttley told Soldier there was real danger of flames reaching the vehicle. One stack of pallets had already collapsed and he feared others would also go.

"The guardsmen bring credit to their regiment and the Army," he said. "It is possibly what the Army would expect of Gdsm Rogers, but I believe his actions were above and beyond what I considered to be his duty."

The incident took place during one of several stints by soldiers of the 1st Battalion, Welsh Guards covering for firemen taking part in a fourth 24-hour stoppage over job losses and annual leave.

Bramley all clear

OPERATION Cornelius, the Army's search for First World War chemical weapons buried on the Bramley Training Area in Hampshire, has been completed a month ahead of schedule.

Sappers from 49 Field Squadron, 33 Engineer Regiment (EOD) at Wimbish began a survey and clearance operation on the site of the former ammunition depot in May.

The 250 rounds of ammunition recovered during the operation suspected of containing chemical agents have been sent to Porton Down for analysis and destruction.

Also uncovered were 1,500 rounds of conventional ammunition – ranging from 9.2-in naval shells to boxes of fuse components – and 5,000 smoke screen pots buried at the end of the First World War.

Larkhill gunners stand by for Igman

LARKHILL-based gunners of the Allied Command Europe (ACE) Mobile Force have been training for possible deployment to Bosnia, where they would take over from 19 Regiment RA based on Mount Igman and at Gornji Vakuf.

The 400 soldiers are drawn from 19 Regiment's HQ 156 Battery and 19/5 (Gibraltar 1779-83) Battery, and 8 (Alma) Commando Battery of 29 Commando Regiment RA.

In Bosnia, UN vehicles now have an improved main supply route since Route Gull was opened. The road, from Doni Vakuf to Turbe, passes through territory once held by the Bosnian Serbs. A bridge had to be built at Komar by sappers from 5 Field Squadron, 38 Engineer Regiment, which has taken over as BRITENGBAT.

It is now possible for aid and military vehicles to drive on a metalled road all the way from the port of Split to Vitez in central Bosnia.

Snow arrived earlier than expected and Royal Engineers have begun a clearance operation in the mountains on the infamous Route Triangle, still used by some military vehicles.

Remembrance services were attended on Mount Igman by soldiers from 19 Regt RA, the Light Infantry and the RAMC, a Dutch mortar battery, and French Foreign Legion troops, and at Mostar by British and French troops serving with the Multinational Brigade HQ.

As Soldier went to press, it was revealed that a platoon from 1st Battalion, The Royal Regiment of Fusiliers had established a base in Bihac in the north-west of Bosnia. The town had been under siege by BSA forces for many months.

● Territorial Army and Regular Army reservists are to be given the opportunity to serve in Bosnia with the NATO Peace Implementation Force.

Armed Forces Minister Nicholas Soames said 350 volunteers would be called for, mainly linguists, meteorologists, intelligence and public relations officers.

Sennybridge unveils new battle ranges

ENHANCED range warden facilities and battle shooting ranges have been opened at Sennybridge Army Field Training Centre.

Early completion of the project meant that training facilities became available more quickly than anticipated, with 4,000 troops using the new battle ranges and trench systems during the first month.

Col Finlay MacLean, HQ Land, opened the facilities when he visited the new demonstration area with MoD personnel and representatives from builders Taylor Woodrow.

Homosexual appeal fails

AN APPEAL by four former Service personnel discharged for being homosexual has been rejected. The Master of the Rolls, Sir Thomas Bingham, said their claim that the banning of homosexuality in the Armed Forces was irrational could not be substantiated. He also refused leave to appeal to the House of Lords.

An MOD study on homosexuality in the Forces, drawing on experience of other countries, will be made available to the Select Committee on the Armed Forces Bill to be put before Parliament next year.

Green Line troops hurt

TWELVE British soldiers have been injured by stone-throwing demonstrators during three days of disturbances on the United Nations' Green Line in Cyprus.

A spokesman for the UN Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) said injuries included a broken nose and a cracked wrist.

UNFICYP Chief of Staff

Maj David Maitland-Makgill-Crichton, Hldrs, said troops from 29 Commando Regiment RA were "in fine fettle and showing remarkable restraint."

The United Nations is seeking the release of a Greek Cypriot National Guard soldier whose detention by authorities in the North sparked the riots.

Reserves Bill: 500 have their say

MORE THAN 500 written responses have been received by the Ministry of Defence to its draft Reserve Forces Bill.

Armed Forces Minister Nicholas Soames said in a written reply that the great majority of responses were supportive of the proposals.

A revised Bill taking account of many useful detailed observations would be introduced as soon as possible, he said.

As part of the Front Line First initiative, the MoD is considering the market-testing of its freight distribution service, which includes the transportation of weapons and ammunitions except in forward operating areas.

Answering a written question by Shadow Defence Secretary David Clark, the Armed Forces Minister said contractors were being invited to bid against existing military organisations. "Private companies and manufacturers themselves already move ammunition and explosives on a regular basis," he said.

"Safety and security will be paramount considerations in the proposed market test."

An announcement about an order for field ambulances is expected to be made by early 1996.

A preliminary study is being made into the possibility of giving defence agency status to the Army's pay and personnel administration.

inclusion will be the Army Personnel Centre, which now also administers pensions and will be fully formed in Glasgow by mid-1997, and a substantial part of the Adjutant General's Information Centre at Worthy Down, Winchester.

It was announced two years ago that the pay and personnel functions were being considered for the status.

A modification programme to render the MoD's Renault Broughton RB44 heavy utility trucks roadworthy was started in October.

About 50 vehicles are being modified each week and by October 30, 136 vehicles had been made roadworthy, said Defence Procurement Minister James Arbuthnot.

There are no plans to disband, merge, or move any Territorial Army units in Northern Ireland in the next three years, it was stated in reply to a written question.

Between January 1, 1992 and January 1, 1995, 116 soldiers were killed on duty. In the same period 7,917 soldiers were injured, it was stated in a written reply.

The figures include all major and minor injuries requiring medical treatment which occurred during exercises, training and sport.

Medical staff serving in the Army, other than doctors and consultants, total 2,942, including 421 officers.

Gulf illness response 'inadequate' – MPs

It's a fact

COALITION forces suffered the loss of 223 personnel killed in action in the Gulf War. No reliable figures are available for Iraqi casualties. – Parliamentary answer.

ARMED Forces Minister Nicholas Soames has described as "unhelpful and disappointing" a Commons Defence Committee report critical of the Ministry of Defence for what it describes as a "hopelessly inadequate" response to evidence of serious illness among several hundred British Servicemen and women who served in the Gulf War.

The all-party committee says it was appalled by the MoD's reluctance to investigate the Gulf War syndrome and called for an inquiry into possible causes.

Although their report was unable to conclude that the syndrome existed, MPs described the MoD as "parsimonious, cavalier and insensitive" in its handling of veterans suffering from a range of ailments claimed to be caused by service in the Gulf.

It drew attention to the sharp contrast between the "compassion" shown by the United States government for its own sick troops, and the "scepticism, defensiveness and general torpor" shown by the MoD.

In America, where up to 30,000 troops have complained of chronic illness, £30 million had been spent by the administration on research and treatment.

The report criticises the MoD's failure to obtain a licence for the use of nerve agent pre-treatment sets (NAPS) containing pyridostigmine bromide until two years after the end of the war.

It also urges improvements to training in biological warfare protection and emphasises that vaccinations should have been staggered in the Gulf to reduce the incidence of short-term side-effects.

Mr Soames said: "Everything that could be done for the veterans was already being done. We retain an open mind on this issue and we are certainly not complacent."

"We are anxious for the health of our Servicemen and women and we will continue to provide first-class care and attention for them."

"We know now the scale of Saddam Hussein's chemical and biological weapons programme. What would have happened if we had not provided this protection for our soldiers, sailors and airmen?"

The Ministry of Defence has two months in which to prepare a written response to the report, said a MoD spokesman.

shattered*

As he closed the door behind him and stepped into the street, the bomb exploded. We collected him after his discharge from hospital. A bomb can do a lot of damage in a narrow Belfast street where danger was a way of life for over 25 years.

We now look after him in our residential home. He will never leave it because of his fear of the outside. His brain connects the outside with pain, terror and danger. He can now only look at the outside world from the safety of four walls.

A Rewarding Experience

Rifle team returns with world honours

BRITISH Army marksmen became world champions when they shot their way to victory at the international Service rifle team competition held in Arkansas.

The blue riband event of the US Armed Forces skill-at-arms meeting held at the US National Guard Marksmanship Training Centre was the culmination of a series of rifle matches.

The ten-man British Regular Army team beat off the best from the Australian, Canadian, German, Italian, US and South African forces, and the Territorial Army and Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve.

Team captain and Army Rifle Association secretary Lt Col Paddy Chambers said: "We were 20 points behind going into the last event but we hauled back points on every detail, ending four ahead of the TA Rifle Association's A team and the US National Guard.

The accuracy of the soldiers and their standard-issue SA 80 weapons was particularly impressive as they had to use US ammunition, less accurate when fired in non-US rifles.

Maj Alwyn McLean, 4 R Irish, led the team to victory in other events, including the close quarter battle match.

A pistol team, headed by Lt Col Richard Hoole, R Signals, was less successful, although WO2 (QMSI) Tony Reece, SASC, from ITC Wales, did win a match and the overall performance was encouraging. The team, chosen and trained for the pistol events rather than drawn from the rifle squad, finished ahead of other British and foreign entries for the first time.

Brig Paul Evans, Commander Royal Logistic Corps Training Group and Deepcut Garrison, discusses the print-out of scores with new recruit Christian Warmley, who was among the first to use the Automatic Marking System (AMS), formally opened at Pirbright ranges. AMS is an electronic means of showing firers where they have hit or missed a target without them having to move from the firing point and without the need to employ markers in the butts.

A Challenger tank from the Queen's Royal Lancers reaches the bank of the Weser at Minden during a demonstration by Hameln-based 28 Engineer Regiment. As part of Exercise Neptune's Endeavour, the sappers showed techniques for getting heavy armour across using a floating bridge and, for almost the final time, the ageing M2 ferry. Scimitars from the Light Dragoons, usually based in Höhne, also acted as the "cargo".

During the four-week exercise, the unit travelled hundreds of miles, bridging at seven different sites and completing more than 250 ferry crossings with the M2, which is due to be replaced next year by the new M3 bridging and ferrying equipment.

Amphibians go through paces

A DEMONSTRATION of ferrying operations and a "super quick build" bridge was put on by 23 Amphibious Engineer Squadron as part of Exercise Neptune's Quest in Germany.

Sponsored by 28 Engineer Regiment, the exercise without troops was part of a Herford Garrison training and education scheme for junior officers. The students also watched a combat engineer tractor demonstrate its amphibious capability and saw the M2D rig - operated in Germany only by 23 Sqn - in action.

After crossing the Weser in Mk5 assault boats, the students watched a ferry being constructed by 23 Sqn's Training Troop and a flotilla of M2 rigs rapidly put together a complete bridge.

More than 70 old comrades and wives from the German 74 Infantry Regiment were greeted by Lt Col Mungo Melvin, CO 28 Engr Regt, when they held their annual reunion and visited Bindon Barracks, Hameln.

Medic's medal

Happy recipient of the prestigious Montefiore Medal, awarded to the officer who comes first in military surgery on the post-graduate medical officers' course at the Army's school of medicine at Ash Vale is Capt Jo Mutimer, RAMC. Jo, who took up her first appointment as a regimental medical officer when she joined the 1st Battalion, Welsh Guards at Tern Hill, Shropshire earlier this year, was presented with the medal by Maj Gen Frederick Mayes, Director General Army Medical Services.

Driving ...

Although LCpl Dawn Gibson, 2 RWW, was unlucky in her attempt to get to the Falklands with the TA, she found a ten-month posting to British Army Training Unit Suffield (BATUS) in Canada a good alternative. There, she was driver to a member of the safety/control staff and attended the Bear Dawn adventurous training expedition.

... and walking

Also involved at BATUS was Capt Guy Woodall of 3 Armoured Engineering Squadron, who confesses to failing in one mission in Canada. He walked three miles across the prairie to celebrate his brother William's birthday, only to find that he had gone to a briefing in his capacity as troop leader with 1 RTR's A Squadron.

HE'S AN OLD MASTER!

Sgt John Lees was sure he had seen the face before when he was issuing protective clothing to Cllr Don Jaques, Mayor of Nuneaton, who was visiting 5th (Warwickshire) Battalion, The Royal Regiment of Fusiliers, during its annual camp at Otterburn. It transpired that Don was a teacher at the school which John left in 1971 to enlist as a Regular with the Fusiliers.

Many happy returns...

Cpl Philip Main's first port of call, on his return to Northern Ireland after being seriously injured in a terrorist attack a month before the IRA cease-fire, was Army Headquarters.

Philip, of the Royal Military Police, met Lt Gen Sir Roger Wheeler, GOC Northern Ireland, before going on to Armagh to spend time with former colleagues. Diagnosed as quadriplegic, Philip, who has been attending the Duke of Connaught Wing in Musgrave Park Hospital, Belfast, hopes to set up a desk-top publishing business from his home.

PEOPLE

End of holy orders?

The Rev Robin Lavery has attended his final camp as a TA padre, in central France. During his 25 years with the 40th (Ulster) Signal Regiment (Volunteers), Robin served with three Honorary Colonels and 11 of the 12 commanding officers 40 Signals has had since its formation in the mid-1960s. He is also one of the few TA padres to have two bars on his Territorial medal, one for 12 years and the other for 18.

Lancers' lovely lolly

Gladly handing over a considerable sum to Bill Griffiths of the Rainbow House Children's Hospice, Walsall, is Sgt Adrian Turner, Queen's Royal Lancers. Bill acted as co-ordinator when QRL soldiers raised more than £3,000 for the hospice during their six-month UN tour in Cyprus.

Fund-raising events included a "fishathon", and Adrian even managed to sell a woolly hat to the UN Chief of Mission, no mean feat in a temperature of 36C.

CSgt Kev Dowling of The Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment (left) and Cpl Andy Seager, who transferred last year to the AGC from the Light Infantry, have both served 36 months of combined operational tours. To mark the achievement the pair, based at Gutersloh with HQ Combat Service Support Group (Germany), were presented with the Accumulated Service Medal by Lt Gen Hew Pike, Deputy C-in-C Land.

Well done, Anthony

Commodore Sandy Backus, Commander British Forces Falkland Islands, hands over a certificate of merit to Cpl Anthony Atkinson, 59 Independent Commando Squadron, Royal Engineers. Employed with the Field Squadron Repair of Airfield Operating Strips Troop while in the Falklands, he successfully commanded the plant on airfield damage repair tasks, and maintained vehicles and equipment, a job normally carried out by a senior NCO.

All in a day's work for Grapple sappers

BRITISH soldiers in Bosnia worked and slept more soundly thanks to sappers serving with the British Engineer Battalion (BRITENGBAT).

When troops on duty with the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) came under increasing threat of attack by warring factions, the sappers moved swiftly to strengthen defensive positions and build hardened shelters.

Engineers deployed on Operation Grapple 6 have just completed their tour of duty in the United Nations' Sector South West.

Drawn from Nienburg-based 21 Engineer Regiment, the group built bridges, constructed camps, and maintained roads and tracks across central Bosnia.

"Part-way through our tour we had to take on considerably more responsibilities than we had originally planned for," said the regiment's 2iC, Maj Philip Naylor.

"Our 1st and 4th Field Squadrons and 7 HQ Squadron found themselves spread across the region, from Split to Tomislavgrad and at Gornji Vakuf, Vitez and the Maglaj finger. We also supported the Multinational Brigade when that deployed."

As the threat of attack heightened, priority was given to providing protection for UNPROFOR troops.

The sappers constructed extra COLPRO - collective protection - shelters, strengthened sangars at the entrances of British bases, and put up "cover from view" fences.

Meanwhile, the regiment continued its programme of renovation work at military bases and organised power, sanitation and water supplies.

BRITENGBAT also had to construct, repair and maintain main supply routes used by UNPROFOR and UNHCR.

"It's a bit like painting the Forth Bridge," said Maj Naylor, "once you reach one end, it's time to start at the other."

environment and the grit will be used to provide grip on ice-packed mountain roads.

The 600-strong engineer group included several attached units.

Equipped with bridgelayers and AVREs, sappers from 6 Troop, 31 Armoured Engineer Squadron hardened shelters at Maglaj and Mount Igman before transferring for duties with Task Force Alpha.

Technical expertise was provided by 519 Specialist Team Royal Engineers from Chilwell which deployed a design cell to produce plans for bridge and base constructions.

Other teams in theatre include 522 STRE and 516 STRE, which administered bulk fuel installation at Ploce Dockyard Camp. Another specialist team - 521 - has been drilling wells to provide water at several bases.

The bomb disposal sappers have been taking the message of mine awareness to UN military and civilian agencies. They have also held classes for Bosnian children who were at risk from unexploded ordnance and thousands of anti-personnel mines which litter the country.

The importance of their lessons was brought sharply into focus because several children have been killed or maimed after finding and picking up loose mines. One boy lost both his legs after setting fire to an unexploded rocket.

The EOD detachment has been involved in monitoring the marking and clearance of minefields, offering advice to BiH and HVO troops who were "persuaded" to point out and remove their own minefields.

There's gold at the end of the Cambrian Patrol

FOUR teams struck gold in this year's Cambrian Patrol, the British Army's premier patrolling competition.

Top honours went to the 5th Battalion, The Royal Irish Regiment; 48 Squadron, RAF Regiment; Bristol University Officer Training Corps and a team of Alpini soldiers from the Italian Julia Brigade.

Ten teams received certificates of merit, and 38 bronze and 25 silver medals were awarded.

The event is based on a long-range reconnaissance patrol, operating within a tactical setting in which teams' performances are monitored.

This year's exercise, based on a conventional United Nations patrol in Bosnia, took place over a ten-day period on the Sennybridge Training Area in Wales. Troops were put through their paces on some of the wildest and most beautiful terrain in the Cambrian Mountains.

Patrols had to break their mission to investigate and assist at a suspected civilian atrocity site and give first aid to casualties.

They also had to establish an observation post and conduct a close target reconnaissance (CTR) in Radnor Forest, identifying units, dispositions and vehicles.

The recovery stage was different for Regular and TA units. Regular patrols were lifted by Sea King helicopters and put down as a quick reaction force to investigate enemy infiltration, conducting a withdrawal in contact, while TA soldiers were picked up by vehicle before carrying out an ambush at a suspected arms cache. Later, all the patrols were confronted by media men keen to learn about their recent operations. Individual soldiers were harassed by persistent reporters, TV camera crews and photographers trying to extract information. The media teams were portrayed by officers from the TA Pool of Public Information Officers who work in the world of television and newspapers.

The Cambrian Patrol places great emphasis on leadership and team spirit and is renowned for the physical and mental demands it makes.

Each patrol completing the course is assessed on points and awarded a certificate or medal on merit.

The challenge attracted more than 100 entries from Regular and Reserve teams from all over Britain, as well as America, Italy, Canada and the Netherlands. Soldiers taking part carried loads of at least 70lb across 100km of rugged countryside. The event was supported by 160 (Wales) Brigade and many Regular and Territorial Army units. Royal Navy helicopters were also used.

The patrol competition is the successor to the old Cambrian March and associated patrol competition which began in the early 1970s as a long-distance trek for Welsh Territorial Army units.

In those days it began on the west coast of Wales and ended with a shoot on Sennybridge. Over the years, the level of entries increased and military skills tests were introduced. Two separate competitions emerged, one for Regular units, the other for the TA. In 1987 the competitive nature of the event was dropped and the event was retitled the Cambrian Patrol.

The best thing that's happened to the Army for years

WO2 Billy MacDonald grinned as his Land Rover bucked across the prairie.

Standing on the passenger seat and bracing himself against the cushioned rim of the hatch cut in the vehicle's roof, he ignored the violent motion, contentedly puffing his pipe, the gleam of battle in his eye.

He was in the middle of a company of armoured infantry bearing down on its enemy, and he was exultant.

"This year's Medicine Man exercises are the best thing that has happened to the British Army in years," he said. "It is great to see. I watch our soldiers moving up the gullies, stalking and taking out Challenger. Incredible."

A former instructor at Brecon, WO2 MacDonald of The Highlanders was an observer/controller during the Medicine Man exercises at the British Army Training Unit Suffield (BATUS).

This year, opposing forces (OPFOR) were introduced to confront the six battle groups being exercised, and all were using Tactical Engagement Simulation equipment (TES).

With TES equipment and computers to establish who killed whom and which side "won", the exercise battlefield was at last realistic.

Computer print-outs of engagements and photographs of formations' positions on a huge map brooked little argument at an after-action review following each "Mission".

WO2 MacDonald considered the OPFOR as probably the best trained unit in the Army. Its tactics and formations were designed to test battle groups to the utmost. Based on former Soviet and new British doctrine, OPFOR relied on speed of reaction and a clear understanding of commanders' intentions.

Almost without exception, it achieved its missions.

guns and dummy rear fuel drums to simulate the powerful T 80s. An infantry company had ten Sturgeons - Spartans modified as BMP 2s but carrying only four infantrymen.

Direct Fire Weapons Effect Simulation computers showed the appropriate armour and characteristics when viewed through a gun sight.

OPFOR infantry were generally taken from the previous battle group's infantry, so were familiar with terrain and tactics.

If necessary, "dead" vehicles could be regenerated and return to the fray as second echelon tank company. It was rarely necessary, however, because OPFOR generally sliced through its enemy embarrassingly quickly.

Before setting off on missions, subalterns and senior NCOs bubbled with adrenaline. They had experience drawn from five previous exercises, knew the ground and their vehicles, and were confident of success. They also knew they had "lost" only one mission, a night attack in which the battle group benefited from the Challenger's Thermal Observation and Gunnery System (TOGS).

CSgt Steve Hall, until recently an instructor at Brecon, had had to adapt to the pace of battle as 2iC of OPFOR's infantry increment from the 1st Battalion, The Green Howards.

He finished instructing in March and found many lessons he taught did not apply in an OPFOR context. "We launch straight into attacks with the minimum preparation," he said.

Speed and flexibility characterised the OPFOR approach, said Capt Jeremy Baldwin, engineer commander: "Once you are in the battle it is every man for himself. Vehicle commanders earn their pay as they hunt out tanks and Warriors and destroy them."

He said there was no point in having a set plan, because it never survived the first contact with the enemy. "It is a case of hit them and hit them hard," said Capt Baldwin. "It is partially based on Soviet shock action and it certainly works because the battle groups are very much in set formations and set pieces."

Capt Baldwin recalled that in a previous Medicine Man, the Queens Dragoon Guards and 2nd Battalion, The Light Infantry put up a great fight because they were unconventional.

"A company commander shouted 'Company charge' over the radio net and 14 Warriors leapt at us. It was rather untidy but it was a swift movement and caught us on the hop for a while."

Commanders soon appreciated that engineering assets were vital and to be protected at all costs. On previous exercises, lip service was paid to the sappers, but at BATUS a mission could fail because engineering resources were destroyed.

The secret of OPFOR success lay in its rapid reactions and lightning thrusts hidden by folds of the prairie. It also had an inherent advantage because commanders had honed their tactics over previous exercises.

"We don't hang around," said Capt Ben Amponsah, 2iC of the OPFOR Infantry Company, "If the CO comes up with something we'll just go off and do it." One trick was to use slave order cards sparingly because of the time it took to decode them. Instead, they used their own brevity code with quick references for salient features.

"While the battle group is waiting for orders or decoding them, we attack them," said one troop sergeant.

Another key to success was close co-operation between the tankies and infantry.

"We have a really good relationship. They do their stuff and leave us to sort out the vehicle tactics," said Capt Amponsah. It was a new ball game for the tankies, who had to learn to take care of infantry, organise extra rations, water and their own driving so that there were no internal casualties.

The company commander (Maj Bob Gamble), vehicle commanders, drivers and gunners were provided by 2 RTR.

Capt Iain Macdonald, OC of the infantry increment of 60 Green Howards, felt dedicated crews were the way forward, with the infantry more like panzer grenadiers. As OC recce for the Green Howards, Capt Macdonald was interested to see how OPFOR's strong combat recce, with two tanks, was often able to "kill" the battle group's recce assets.

"Unless the battle group has a commander who is prepared to go against the grain doctrinally, I don't think the battle group will win," he said.

The new-look Medicine Man exercises were a wonderful way to start his command of 2 RTR, said Lt Col Nigel Aylwin-Foster. He joined the regiment on August 1 and took over OPFOR two days later.

"I love Soltau dearly but it is impossible to manoeuvre with the freedom we have here."

"Without doubt it is the most effective training anybody could possibly want. It is early days and there are modifications and developments

When winning is less important than learning

TRY telling a squaddie he is not fighting to win and he will wonder if you are reading a different training manual.

But staff at BATUS are happier that a battle group commander should "lose" every battle and learn, than "win" and not learn.

This concept is impressed upon soldiers who arrive to train in the Medicine Man series of exercises in Canada.

Winning or losing was not important, but achieving the training objective was vital, said BATUS commander Col Nick Seymour, Scots DG, though he accepted not everybody believed this, particularly when 1 RTR squared up to 2 RTR in Medicine Man 5.

Certainly Maj Simon Allen, now a key member of the BATUS exercise control staff, was not worried that his own regiment was annihilating itself.

With 1 and 2 RTR locked in combat on the prairies of Alberta and inflicting unacceptable casualties on each other, Maj Allen was forcing the issue as the man responsible for controlling the carnage.

Exercises at BATUS are often drawn out far longer than the point at which battle groups would be pulled out of the line and replaced. This emphasises training objectives which have been agreed in advance.

Although an astute commander should realise when all is lost and the most sensible action is to disengage and save what forces he can, this is not an option available at BATUS.

"Inevitably there is a competitive spirit," said Lt Col Peter Gilchrist, CO of 1 RTR. "But winning is not the point, although we were quite pleased when the OPFOR had to generate a third company for the first time to achieve its mission."

In the Intelligence cell, Capt Steve Proctor and WO2 Sammy Sinclair found it particularly stimulating working against a live enemy which used active chemical agents.

The RAC was good at sending back consolidated situation reports, they said. The infantry had improved in this respect since working with the tankies.

The experience brought everybody back to basics, said 1 WFR's A Company commander Maj Barney Haugh, who had gained more grey hairs in the two weeks of TES exercises than at any other time.

"If a soldier stands up or doesn't adopt a decent fire position he is going to get 'killed' and my combat power would quickly be eroded. Fieldcraft has once again come to the front."

The first Warrior battalion established in UK, 1 WFR finished converting in early June, said Maj Haugh. "We have made mistakes and learned from them, and the battalion and brigade will benefit."

Putting the brigade commander's spin on the battle was 1 Mechanised Brigade Chief of Staff, Maj David Rutherford-Jones, Light Dragoons, who saw the essential elements for success as knowing the commander's mind, and being a gear higher than the opposition.

Tanks in the past tended to think they were invulnerable.

"We had become quite casual, but TES forces task commanders and soldiers to be realistic about their own low-level tactics."

"If I use the skyline I am going to be destroyed so I have to look at the ground and find the best way round it."

Instead of a notional threat WO2 Sammy Sinclair and Capt Steve Proctor of the Intelligence Cell have a live enemy and live chemicals to chart Higher-level tactics counted for nothing if low-level skills and drills were not spot on.

Gunners had constantly to scan the ground, drivers to select the best route without revealing their movements.

Reconnaissance patrols rediscovered what they had always known, that theirs is a vital but high risk occupation. Lose the recce and information battle, and all is lost.

OPFOR recce, using tanks, fought aggressively for information while battle group recce by stealth did not succeed. Its recce vehicles were taken out and the force was left blind.

WO2 Iain Fleming, sergeant major of A Squadron, 1 RTR, found it scary watching waves of enemy vehicles attacking.

As the man responsible for casualty evacuation, WO2 Fleming was not happy with what he had available.

"We have 79 blokes and one ambulance which can take two stretchers and three sitting wounded," he said.

"I've never been to war except in the Gulf where it was a different kind of battle. We have to expect to take a lot of casualties, and it worries me because the system has been exposed here."

Although horrendous casualties would have been inflicted in the space of a few hours, Capt Peter McMullen, an Irish Guards observer/controller, detected the battle groups improving by leaps and bounds.

Woofers LCpl Patrick Legge, Pte Colin Dooley and driver Cpl Fred Toogood

"In live firing, we can say 'You shouldn't do that' but with TES the OPFOR will have shot you, so you learn not to do it again," said the commander, Col Nick Seymour.

Better a raging frustration at being "killed" in the first hour of an action when one learns more in those 60 minutes than during all one's previous training.

It is an easier death when soldiers know that control staff can regenerate them. At least BATUS they can benefit from the experience, and live to fight – and win – another day.

which I am sure will take place but there is no doubt that it is the way to go in the future," he said.

There was been much discussion about whether the OPFOR was applying new doctrine, but Col Aylwin-Foster thought not.

"Our basic doctrine is British Army doctrine and it is very encouraging for the British Army that mission command gives freedom of action at all levels. It allows junior commanders initiative.

"The basic principles on which we operate are to find, fix and fight the enemy, destroy him, seek to manoeuvre and take the advantage of surprise and get within his decision cycle.

"None of our tactics are novel, and I can't think of anything we do that hasn't been used at some stage in the British Army.

"A lot of times I think battle groups stick to what they know and therefore are not that adventurous. What we are doing is not taking new ideas, but trying out lots of different things."

One of the concepts he stressed was how essential it was to meet the OPFOR mission no matter how many commanders were killed.

Being able to carry on without being told what to do was one of the strengths of the OPFOR. It exploited freedom of action and relied very heavily on commanders' initiative.

"When I was 'killed' – for the first time in a mission and ironically by the CO of 1 RTR – I don't really think it made any difference because everybody knew what I was trying to achieve, and they achieved it."

A potent danger tank crews had to recognise was the clearly demonstrated punch of the infantry.

"Before TES, tanks could ignore the infantry, drive past and vanish into the distance," said the CO.

"We have been reminded that hand-held anti-tank missiles can be devastating."

A possible answer lay in the speed at which the OPFOR moved.

"On one occasion I was with ten tanks which drove through the battle group's Milan matrix. The only ones killed were those which slowed down. The ones that kept going flat out survived."

The secret was to work out what was going on and to decide what to do before the other side could assess and make his own decision.

"We try to get inside their decision cycle, and generally speaking we succeed. That is why the OPFOR achieves its tasks all the time, because we act and react much quicker than they do."

Col Aylwin-Foster said that during one mission he realised he was about to be outflanked but took five minutes too long to decide what to do about it.

"I committed part of my force to deal with it, but it was caught on the hop and destroyed.

"A few minutes can make the difference between success or failure. You have to make decisions in a vacuum because you never really know what the enemy is up to."

With the benefit of three months' training in which he has learned a huge amount,

Col Aylwin-Foster looks forward to digesting the many lessons, then returning to BATUS with the first battle group of the 1996 season.

"Ironically, we will be facing the last battle group of the 1995 season, the King's Royal Hussars, who will be very keen to beat us.

"The BATUS staff also know us so we will have no leeway and can expect no excuses. We will have no friends here next year..."

WO1 Bris Lightowler and Barry Finkelman have a liaison meeting

Watching brief only for RMP

THE SQUADDIE slumped at his seat in Medicine Hat's "Sin Bin" night club presented a sad picture.

First night back from 22 days' hard exercise, paid good money for a drink and a ring-side seat to watch the dancer who was, well, dancing on stage – and the exhausted soldier was gently snoring.

But there was no need for the joint Royal Military Police and Medicine Hat Police patrol to become involved.

A steward gently roused the soldier and suggested a mate take him into the fresh air – without his drink.

Canada has draconian penalties for minor misdemeanors unsuspected by British soldiers, including the carrying of alcohol in public places.

WO1 Bris Lightowler and his seven RMP corporals provide what is almost an advice and assistance agency.

"We are not out to spoil their fun, but to look after their interests," he said. "On any one night 500 soldiers go into town. They are all young, have worked hard and are obviously out for a good time."

"I can honestly say that 98 per cent will have a good time, and that the people of Medicine Hat or Calgary will never be aware of them."

"The sole reason we are here is to look after their interests and keep them on the straight and narrow."

WO1 Lightowler has a remarkably effective working relationship with Barry and Maureen Finkelman, owners of Medicine Hat's main night club.

Mr Finkelman and his staff go out of their way to keep a benevolent eye on their guests. He has had as many as 300 soldiers packed into his establishment and is impressed at how little trouble is caused.

Canadian police and RMP welcome a joint, common-sense approach. "Trivial stuff which can be kept out of Canadian courts saves time, money and adverse publicity," said WO1 Lightowler.

Far from reading about British misdemeanours, Canadians are more likely to learn of close co-operation with their visitors. British staff at BATUS helped fill sandbags and build dykes when the Saskatchewan river flooded, and snipers were brought in to deflate a propane gas tank which was in danger of striking a bridge support. Army helicopters helped to search a remote area for graves.

Friendship between the two forces, extending to invitations to barbecues at home, started when training began at BATUS in 1972.

Constable Rick Rawlins, ex-Royal Canadian Navy, is an old hand who appreciates what the Brits bring to the beat.

"These guys were in the Falklands and the Gulf War and bring a whole new world of experience to policemen stuck in one city," he said.

Support staff keeps them wagons rollin'

COVERED wagons still roll across the great plains of North America – trundling after British battle groups which exercise in Canada from April to October.

Early settlers needed their wagon trains; so do today's soldiers. It took a three-kilometre train to move Opposing Forces' vehicles the 2,000-odd miles from the East Coast to Alberta before the start of this exercise season.

Each battle group has a retinue of some 250 covered wagons, mostly Bedfords and Leyland Dafs today, but further behind is an ants' nest of activity which provides everything from fuel to replacement Challengers.

This essential support for the battle groups and OPFOR is provided by five sub-units.

Support is also extended to the training staff at Wainwright farther north in Alberta.

While the teeth arms have a concentrated period of 22 days in the field, elements of the support staff have a continual fight to keep six shows on the road, prepare the range and clear up afterwards on top of extensive vehicle maintenance throughout the winter.

During the "prairie" season while battle groups are in the field, the sub-units operate on a 24-hour basis; over the winter repair period they regularly work 60-hour weeks to service of vehicles.

The BATUS engineer park provides engineer resources and targetry used during the live firing phases of Medicine Man, as well as equipment for the Royal Engineers squadron which refurbishes the ranges during the winter.

Last winter the Exercise Warpaint squadron used more than £100,000 worth of materials in preparing equipment for the Medicine Man 95 series of exercises.

Restrictions in the United Kingdom on the use of Royal Engineers equipment such as the minefield-busting Giant

Workshop OC Maj Paul Shewry

Viper do not apply in Canada, so it can be employed to spectacular effect.

The sappers also lead a range services support group. As well as simulation explosive charges to represent artillery and mortars, the sappers prepare and operate all the mechanical targetry on 1,300 units spread across the Block.

A composite supply depot managed by 105 Squadron Royal Logistic Corps holds 26,000 separate categories of item headings. Along with 900 vehicles and their ancillary equipment there are 300 types of ammunition, ranging from SA80 5.56mm rounds to Milan rounds costing £13,000 each.

The BATUS Workshop REME provides second-line support to the battle groups and OPFOR, with first and second line support offered to safety vehicles. During the previous winter repair period the workshop completed more than 100 hours per man of repair a month, as against the REME average of 35 hours.

The Quartermaster Technical department provides technical services through a first line unit repair store and a unit support store, while the BATUS Support Unit covers families, housing, welfare, medical catering and transport facilities.

Keeping vehicles from Land Rovers to AS90s on the road is the task of the Workshop, and it is a huge task.

The whole range of A vehicles appears on its books, and soldiers specialise across the board. It is unusual to see an AS90 parked next to a Challenger in Europe, but not at BATUS, where OC Maj Paul Shewry's fitters have to be masters of almost every skill.

With 130 summer staff and 180 in winter, it is a large workshop, and most of the soldiers will do more work in six months than they would in two years back in their own units.

Soldiers have more responsibility at a lower rank than in most other workshops and are not dogged by regular guard and fatigue duties.

Vehicles are as hard worked as the men. A tank in Germany will be base overhauled every ten years. In BATUS it is every two years because tanks do in one year what would normally be done in five.

Hardest worked of all are the redtops and their fitters. It is vital to keep the safety vehicles on the road because if they break down the whole exercise could grind to a halt.

SSgt Dave Emeny from Osnabrück supervises work on the 160 safety vehicles, which have increased from 120 last year and 100 the previous year.

"A normal RLC fitter section may deal with 60 vehicles so this is the hardest working fitter section in the Army," he said.

"We have prop shafts at right angles, chassis completely cracked and axles cracked in half, and we are repairing stuff we would never touch unless in a war situation," said SSgt Emeny.

Rough terrain on the prairie means vehicles regularly smash the front axle and steering assembly.

The Workshop successfully fought for underbody armour suggested by a quartermaster last year and now saves tax payers a fortune in spares and time. Whereas 17 different axles were needed last year, only three were required by the last exercise this year.

Cpl Rob Browne modified the air cleaner on the Leyland Daf 4-ton truck and greatly increased engine life span. Prairie dust is a fine talcum powder which reaches places other dusts can't.

The RLC's 105 (BATUS) Squadron has also eased the burden on the public purse.

For legal reasons, the ammunition depot is run by Canadians; 2,400 tons valued at £32 million are issued in spring and autumn tranches, with each battle group requiring 300 tons for its Med Man exercise.

Sorting empty cases from live round was a tedious business before a unique machine was introduced. It handles 134 kg in less than a day with an error of one live round in four million. The task used to keep three men busy for a week.

Another expensive but cost-effective investment was a massive drive-through wash-down. Vehicles are not allowed into the Force Maintenance Area until they have been properly cleaned and two-day long queues would build up.

"Time is very precious at the end of an exercise with so much maintenance and servicing before handing over to the next battle group, but the drive-through quickly pays for itself in soldiers' time," said squadron OC Maj Martin Shilton.

"It used to take 43 hours for one battle group to pass through; it now takes 14 hours, including the OPFOR and redtop vehicles."

The "natives" are friendly, and civilian staff provide an essential element of the work force. Many are ex-Servicemen now settled in Canada, who know the score and provide continuity to keep the latter-day wagons moving safely across the prairies.

Land Command in Brunei for first time

SCORPIONS, swamps and dense jungle were the real challenge when the British Army's newest headquarters exercised in its farthest outpost.

The battalion and garrison level field training exercise, code named Ulu Rajah, took place in Brunei, the first time the Wilton-based HQ Land Command has exercised troops there since assuming command earlier this year.

Involved were HQ Land, Land Command troops, Brunei Garrison and the 2nd Battalion, The Royal Gurkha Rifles. Ulu Rajah ranged over a number of phases, escalating from a battalion call-out and local defence to evacuation operations and a live-firing package.

Air and sea elements of the Royal Brunei Armed Forces (RBAF) also took part, providing helicopter and fast assault boat support.

Brig Andrew Cumming, Assistant Chief of Staff (Operations), led the HQ Land team, with just three staff to "play" the brigade headquarters. They were assisted by five umpires from the United Kingdom and a small team from 29 Commando Regiment RA and 36 Engineer Regiment to represent gunner and sapper units.

JHQ was set up in Sittang Camp, about 40km from the 2 RGR barracks in Seria and 60km from the exercise area. Final phase of the exercise was a battalion-strength attack on an enemy force dropped by parachute close to the coast. RBAF fast assault boats were used to move two companies up the river and the attack went in at dawn following a live-firing night defensive battle.

British High Commissioner Ivan Callan watched the final assault on the RBAF range complex. "The element of co-operation with the Royal Brunei Armed Forces is most important," he said. "I hope this co-operation will grow."

Brig Cumming was satisfied with the results. "With the garrison now under command of HQ Land, this was a good opportunity to put the battalion and the garrison through their paces.

"It went extremely well. It was multi-phased, starting with a non-combatant evacuation operation to get the families out, followed by a joint theatre plan for the reinforcement of the garrison by an ad hoc force from the UK," he said.

"The exercise then moved into the jungle to destroy the enemy, followed by the live-firing exercise.

"My lasting impression of the exercise was that behind every bush was a Gurkha, and behind every Gurkha an enormous smile – and they are still smiling."

Fuse that thwarted Hitler

THERE are people alive today who almost certainly owe a debt of gratitude to the late Dr William Butement.

While Hitler's flying bombs killed and wounded thousands of Londoners and inhabitants of the South

Dr Butement

East, more would have suffered had it not been for the 40-year-old "boffin" from New Zealand.

Then assistant director of scientific research at the Ministry of Supply, William Butement, and a team of scientists, invented and perfected Britain's key secret weapon, the radio proximity fuse.

It beat the flying bombs, saved Allied fleets from disaster against suicide bombers in the Pacific, and played a crucial part in repelling the German Ardennes offensive in December 1944.

According to Soldier's John Grove, writing in the November 10, 1945 issue, the radio fuse was second in importance to the discovery of the atomic bomb.

It revolutionised anti-aircraft gunnery, giving guns a precision seven times greater than that obtained with the standard clockwork fuse shell.

As long as the new "radio" shell passed within a certain predetermined distance of the target, the projectile would explode.

Co-developers of the fuse included Dr E S Shire and Dr A F G Thomson.

Dr Butement went on to become chief scientist at Woomera, the rocket-testing range in Australia. He was awarded the CBE in 1959 and died in 1990 at the age of 86.

Sorry, chum!

Gunners keep their eyes on the sky

SOLDIERS from 105th Regiment Royal Artillery (Volunteers) trained with the Army's new Air Defence Command and Information System (ADCIS) computer system as part of their annual camp.

They are among the first Terriers to be equipped with ADCIS: the only Regular Army unit currently with the system is 47 Regiment, Royal Artillery.

Overlapping training with Liverpool's 103 Regiment ensured that 105 are now on a par with their Regular counterparts in converting to the system.

Training was split between two locations - ADCIS at Larkhill and nearby Knook Camp, and Penhally in Wales. There, other soldiers completed the ten-day course to allow them to fire the the regiment's Javelin anti-aircraft missile.

Battery recce driver LBdr Allan Dorward and Battery Command Post's Bdr Roddy Sutherland, both of 212 Bty, come to terms with new ADCIS computers fitted into the Saxon vehicles

At Larkhill, the mysteries of the main processor were explained to the gunners during an intensive two-week course.

A core element of the ADCIS system, the computer processors are mounted in Saxon vehicles, which recently replaced Land Rovers within the regiment.

The other main component of ADCIS is the data entry device (DED), the complexities of which were explained to detachment sergeants and their 2iCs at Knook Camp.

Time and resources were also devoted to the REME LAD, which undertook maintenance training for the Saxons.

Maj Jim Kinloch said: "With the arrival of ADCIS, our air defence capability is brought into the 20th century, and provides us with a system whereby the transfer and updating of equipment is very quick.

"This enables us to use our missiles much more effectively than was the case previously, when communications were by encoded signal and radios."

EX FIRST CRUSADE

Woofers' Warriors stand ready for the enemy

Crusaders leap the last hurdle

CHALLENGERS, Chieftains, Warriors and Saxons joined battle on Salisbury Plain at the end of last month as 1 (Mechanised) Brigade practised high intensity brigade and battle group operations.

About 8,000 soldiers and 1,200 vehicles took part in Exercise First Crusade at the culmination of Tidworth-based 1 (Mech) Bde's training year.

The brigade comprises 1st Royal Tank Regiment with Chieftain and the 1st Battalion, The Worcestershire and Sherwood Foresters in Warrior, with the 1st Battalion, The Queen's Lancashire Regiment in Saxon. All three units had recently sharpened their battle drills in Alberta, 1 RTR and 1 WFR exercising together at BATUS and 1 QLR training at Wainwright.

Support was provided by the HQ and Signal Squadron; 1 RHA; 10 Bty, 47 Regt RA; 22 Engr Regt; 21 Bde Spt Sqn RLC; 16 Armd Fd Amb; 3 and 15 Fd Wksp RE ME; and the brigade provost unit.

Opposing the brigade was 3 RGR, who have one company in the Falkland Islands, a squadron of Challenger tanks from 1 QRH, a recce squadron from the Household Cavalry Regiment, a 9 Regiment AAC squadron, and F Company, 1 SG.

Exercise control was provided by 5 Airborne Brigade which also carried out parachute drops and provided four eight-man damage control teams which, because of the good weather, had little to do.

Although the exercise was fast moving, safety consciousness was high, particularly in relation to drivers getting enough sleep. There was no live firing and strenuous efforts were made to keep local residents informed of activity. More than 300 vehicles of the Brigade Support Group made a very successful night move.

First five days were devoted to battle group operations involving attack and support helicopters and fixed wing assets.

The second half of First Crusade allowed brigade commander Brig Brian Plummer to step back from control and be exercised by 3 (UK) Division. His brigade staff had to make sense of the chaos.

Brig Plummer said this year's exercise was significantly bigger than the 1994 First Crusade.

Although focused on the brigade effort, Brig Plummer said he was conscious it was the endeavours of individual soldiers and sub units that made the operation work.

"The soldier on the ground is certainly as important and in some places more important than the brigade commander," he said. "It is very much team work. If the soldier hasn't the right tools at the right time and doesn't know what he has to do then the plan doesn't work."

Training of the three major units in Alberta had clearly paid off, he said. It had showed up weak points in the organisation and emphasised the need for a simple plan if it was going to survive.

Gurkhas from 3 RGR and the Scots Guards' F Company, who two days later would be on guard at Buckingham Palace, bore the brunt of the brigade attack.

The Gurkhas and Scots Guards had worked together in Belize and Kenya before First Crusade, said LSgt Paul Barry.

Although many of the troops had experience of tactical engagement simulation exercises, on First Crusade they were in the hands of umpires who decided who died and who lived.

An uncompromising umpire watched as Rfn Ram Bdr Phagu and Cpl Gopil Limbu waited for soldiers to debus from a Warrior.

The two Gurkhas went unnoticed because their trench was well camouflaged and the attackers were concentrating on a nearby Milan position. They engaged three Warriors with their 94mm light anti-tank weapon and kept their heads down every time the chain gun swivelled in their direction.

As the section tumbled from the back of the Warrior the first two soldiers were shot by the Gurkhas and knocked out by the umpire.

It took some time before the remainder were able to reach the trench and clear it with a grenade.

As the final attacks were successfully completed the latter-day crusaders could be pleased at a good battle.

"The enemy was soundly defeated and many lessons were learned in the process," said 3 Div Chief of Staff, Col Andrew Ritchie.

"First Crusade was highly successful and achieved the objectives laid down by the GOC. These opportunities do not occur often given the constraints of training areas and other operational commitments."

It was important to assess the ability of the brigade to deploy at full strength in realistic field conditions and against a live enemy.

"Without such exercises, we would be unable to maintain our deployable brigades in a high state of readiness for future operations."

Having proved themselves at high intensity conflict, the brigade may have to focus on humanitarian work if it is required to deploy to Bosnia on Operation Grapple. It is a strong possibility.

Turtle success for Rangers

THIRTY-FIVE soldiers from the 4th/5th Battalion, The Royal Irish Rangers were the fifth and final Territorial Army unit to visit Ascension Island this year.

They took part in the last of the annual Turtle Reef exercises, shortened from the original four weeks to gear it towards the TA.

Used as a staging post for forces on their way to the Falklands War in 1982, Ascension Island is currently a Royal Air Force re-fuelling outpost for Tristars on their way to Mount Pleasant, where 4/5 Rangers provided the first TA rifle platoon for the reinforced infantry company based there last year.

About a third of the soldiers on Turtle Reef 5 had served in that platoon.

Both terrain and climate on Ascension pose severe challenges to the infantry soldier, since the island is composed almost entirely of rugged volcanic rock and the weather is variable.

The chance to train the battalion's Cambrian Patrol team was eagerly seized, the landscape providing an ideal opportunity to carry out tough physical training.

Marksmanship, close-target reconnaissance, hide routine, minefield breaching, casevac and first aid were also covered during the camp.

The importance of good signals communication was brought out, with all rations being left in dead-letter drops.

The Irish Rangers tried many of Ascension's leisure activities, although they were given a sound thrashing at football by the resident RAF side. The score reached near-Twickenham proportions.

As well as leaving the island with a wealth of unforgettable experiences and war stories, members of the battalion gained a healthy respect for the professionalism of the RAF, who were excellent hosts.

SIGNALLERS' FRENCH CONNECTION

MEN and women of the 40th (Ulster) Signal Regiment (Volunteers) have been training alongside their French Regular counterparts to hone their soldiering skills - and become familiar with equipment which is breaking new ground in battlefield communications.

Exercise Merlin Stone, near La Courtine in the Limousin area, was designed to task the 250 Territorial Army soldiers from Northern Ireland with providing the different types of communications required by battlefield commanders or those in charge of international human relief missions.

The volunteers of 40 Signals provide TA back-up to the globetrotting Regulars of 30 Signal Regiment, responsible for the British Army's worldwide deployment communications.

Although 40 Signals regularly trains abroad for its NATO role, this was the first time it had exercised in France.

The terrain proved ideal in testing the soldiers' skills of achieving remarkable results over difficult terrain and long distances.

From the wooded hills overlooking the training camp at La Courtine, members of the regiment established a full battlefield network. They also used newly-issued high frequency transceivers to bounce messages off the ionosphere, impressing the French signallers in the process.

With its regimental headquarters at Clonaver Park, Belfast, the regiment has squadrons located in Newtownards (85th (Ulster) Sig Sqn) and Limavady (69 Squadron). The latter, "transferred" from 32 Signal Regiment in Scotland in April, is the regiment's newest element. Based at Clonaver Park are an HQ Squadron and 66th (City of Belfast) Sig Sqn.

Soldiers from the regiment helped test hi-tech equipment before it was sent to Bosnia.

HONOURS AND AWARDS

Portland EOD bomb hero awarded QGM

CAPT Michael Lobb RE, who defused a massive unexploded bomb on the island of Portland, Dorset, in March, has been awarded the Queen's Gallantry Medal. His two-day ordeal was completed in the glare of television cameras.

His award is one of dozens for service in Northern Ireland, Bosnia and Rwanda.

Capt Lobb was duty bomb disposal officer for 33 Engineer Regiment (EOD) based at Wimbish when the 1,100lb German Second World War bomb was detected buried under a dis-used football pitch.

One of the largest civil evacuations in Britain since the end of the war was carried out as Capt Lobb, in command of a team from 58 Field Squadron, tackled the bomb.

Because of the hardness of the shell, he had to make 22 approaches to the bomb, which was assessed as unstable and highly dangerous. He refused to allow any of his soldiers to deputise for him during the 31-hour operation.

His non-operational award was Gazetted separately.

Capt Tony Coltard RE, appointed MBE, commanded EOD teams based at Vitez and Zepce in former Yugoslavia. He supervised the clearance of 47,000 mines from the Vitez pocket, pioneered the marking of about 17,000 mines, and drew detailed maps of the minefields in the area.

Maj Farren Drury RGBW was appointed OBE for outstanding command of C Company Group in Bugojno, central Bosnia. He instigated dozens of community projects in a town ravaged by fighting.

Also made OBE is Sgt James Mackie REME, who, while serving as the recovery mechanic of 64 Engineer Squadron at Tomislavgrad, risked life and limb on many occasions to rescue UN and civilian vehicles and their passengers stranded on treacherous mountain roads.

WO2 Paul Lewis, Squadron Corporal Major of the medium recce squadron of The Household Cavalry, was responsible for dealing with the many claims made against the UN resulting from traffic accidents on the main supply routes.

Incidents regularly led to UN drivers being held at gunpoint, and WO2 Lewis displayed great moral and physical courage in single-handedly introducing a fair system of recompense that was decisive in giving the peace-keepers long-term freedom of movement.

Recruits will return – but they must be looked after

SOMEWHERE in the depths of the Ministry of Defence there must be a group of men and women having difficulty biting back the words "We told you so". It seems that there will have to be an increased recruitment effort if shortfalls in manpower are to be made up. This must be music to the ears of those who warned that cuts were going too deep and too fast. But it isn't as simple as that. People aren't joining up. Incentives being talked about include persuading mothers to encourage their children to join the Army. I know mothers who would be only too pleased if their offspring would sign up for a bit of fresh air, exercise and discipline. There must also be mothers who wished their precious young hadn't had to go to Bosnia. In between are the soldiers – male and female – working in trades and learning new skills and wondering what the future holds for them. Would they recommend the life? It depends on who you ask. Everyone will have had a different experience of Service life but my letters reflect a tension that wasn't present before Options for Change. People are genuinely worried. They wonder what is going to be cut next. Those stationed overseas increasingly feel out on a limb. There is concern among families in Germany about the future of the medical services. In a call from Hong Kong I heard mothers express worries about their children's education. As it turned out, their concerns had been addressed. Some hadn't heard the information, of course, but their reaction might not have been so extreme in a more stable climate. But these are concerns which remain "in house", so why is Service life proving less attractive? It can't be an image problem. Never have there been so many documentaries and dramas on television. Soldier, Soldier, for example, is a well-written, well-researched and realistic portrayal of Army life. Viewers have taken the characters to their hearts. Is it the way in which Army life is promoted? One much-used phrase calls the Army the "best-trained workforce" in Britain. There is no doubting it. Anyone employing an ex-soldier doesn't just get the benefit of a better-than-average training. He also gets a person who knows the meaning of loyalty, initiative and grace under pressure. That may well be attractive from the employers' point of view but would it tempt a potential recruit? It's unlikely. It's easy to get on-the-job training now. Companies have caught on to the benefits of developing employees' abilities. Army adverts emphasise leadership and responsibility, challenge and adventure. It might attract those already considering this kind of life but it won't persuade young people I've met for whom these are outmoded concepts. Research shows that youngsters are motivated by different ideas. We are told the young increasingly see themselves as European rather than British. They think that "Queen and Country" belong in the past. There is evidence that they are concerned about the environment and world peace in a more practical way than their parents. So why aren't they attracted to the kind of peacekeeping role which is clearly on show in Bosnia?

The sad fact is that many young people of today aren't attracted to notions of service, duty or group identity. They have not been exposed to them at school. When I left teaching I had grown tired of being told off for involving my children in team games, in competitive sports, and in periods of silent working. Individualism was king. I believe that what we are seeing now is the result of that philosophy. It is unfortunate that it came when a change in world politics gave the Government a chance to cut costs. But the tide is turning. The National Curriculum has brought order to learning. Teachers are being scrutinised for their effectiveness. There is talk that team games and competition are to be encouraged. News that junior leader courses may return and apprentice colleges may be revitalised should be welcomed. They will provide an incentive. For now, the recruiters should keep their nerve while those concerned with welfare should continue to address the needs of soldiers trying to reconcile the tensions of modern life and Service life. Eventually I believe we will see the results of social change. The character of Service life will evolve, the "caring" generation will once again be attracted by the communal life of the Army and numbers applying will rise. When they do the Army must be ready for them. Policy-makers must be willing to take seriously the concerns of families. There should be rewards for those trying to build a career in the Army rather than just putting in the time. There must be sensible provision for medical care overseas. And there must be well-maintained, secure housing for those who want or need it. Unless the people who join the Army feel valued and cared-for, all the efforts put into recruitment will be dissipated in an atmosphere of disappointment and disillusionment. ● Cari Roberts presents Counterpoint on BFBS radio. FAW (GERMANY) 7th ANNUAL CONFERENCE

Tell us why, say wives

ARMY wives in Germany wanted to hear from the decision-makers the reasons behind the less palatable decisions that they had to live with. In her opening address to the seventh annual conference of the Federation of Army Wives (Germany) at Herford, chairman Mrs Denise Chaganis said the theme "Reason and Reality" reflected the mood of many wives in Germany. Many wanted to question the reasons behind some decisions and all had to face up to the reality of simply getting on with life despite the difficulties. Stressing that the FAW always tried to be a voice of reason, Mrs Chaganis said some of today's realities were "pretty stark": changes in healthcare, closure of schools, greater commuting distances, even shorter time between operational tours and the unrelenting quest for better services at less cost. Addressing an audience which include the Defence Under-Secretary, Earl Howe and the Adjutant General, Gen Sir Michael Rose, Mrs Chaganis said particular concerns for Army families were the closure of some Service schools and 24-hour medical facilities; undermanning and the probability that the goal of a 24-month tour gap would not be achieved; the possible acceptance of homosexuals in the Army; and the psychological trauma of prolonged peacekeeping duties in dangerous situations and the knock-on effect in the home when husbands returned. Maj Gen Scott Grant, Commander HQ UKSC(G), told delegates that the reorganisation of the Army and manpower reductions were nearly completed and went on to outline the new garrison structure in Germany. He assured wives of a smooth transition to the new medical arrangements and underlined the role of parents in the new worldwide schools agency.

Bosnia withdrawal an option

EARL Howe told the FAW conference that the government would not hesitate to withdraw Op Grapple troops if the dangers became too great. Other points from the speech were: ● It was acknowledged that new policies had meant turbulent times, but with a smaller, more stable army had come the recognition for an investment in people. ● A definitive statement would be made in the spring on the Bett Review of pay, conditions of service, career and manpower structures. ● The Under-Secretary recognised that the target of an average 24-month interval between operational tours had not been possible

Question to Earl Howe: You were clear as to unemployment benefit (UB) being paid in Germany. Where do wives returning from Germany and leaving full-time jobs stand when claiming UB?

Earl Howe: A person's national insurance contribution is geared to ability to pay a social insurance scheme, so it is unlikely that all conditions applying to payment of unemployment benefit in those circumstances would be satisfied.

Question: Where is the justification for Northern Ireland pay continuing while those serving in Bosnia receive little or nothing for hardship? The Bosnia allowance is a UN incidental daily allowance of £1; NI pay is £4.13.

Earl Howe: This question is very much in our minds at the moment. I understand that feelings run high on this point. It is seen to be unfair and it is something ministers are looking at. I hope we can say more in a short while.

band. Only cases where the parent with care was receiving social security benefit would be processed at present. Non-benefit cases will be dealt with in April. ● Improved opportunities for those wanting to pursue careers in education would be available. With the Return to Learn schemes in secondary schools and the Question: The UK-produced brochure on claiming unemployment benefit given to families before they arrive in Germany is "double Dutch" to many young wives. Their benefit office tells them to sort it out in Germany, but when they arrive in Germany they have seven days to claim or they lose out because they have not applied in the UK.

Q and A

(Mrs Chaganis intervened to say there was no doubt some DSS offices in the UK were not giving Service personnel the support they deserved. She said many wives arriving from Scotland and Northern Ireland were able to claim, while those from predominantly garrison towns were not given proper information.)

Earl Howe: I will take that back with me; I am very concerned to hear that. It isn't right that people are losing out in the maze of regulations.

Tidworth is tidier – thanks to garrison's Poop Patrol

Keeping it clean: Armed with scoops, small spades, buckets and bin bags, coveralls and protective gloves, these intrepid soldiers and their wives have been trying their best, with others, to ensure that the highways and byways around Tidworth Garrison are kept clear of dog faeces. From left to right they are Pte Matt Williams and wife Val, Cpl Mac Farmer with wife Sarah and campaign organiser Chrissie McCammon with her husband

Sgt Kevin McCammon. All are from 1 WFR. As a pet-owner herself, Chrissie says she is fully aware of the danger to children which dog-fouling can cause in passing on toxocaritis. With the approval of the local dog warden and environmental officer, she has spearheaded a campaign in the area to enlighten Army families. Collection of waste following the group's clearing patrols is made free of charge by the local council.

Service men and women can buy surplus married quarters at a 30 per cent discount as long as the property is retained for five years. – Parliamentary reply.

MQ transfer news soon

NEWS on the transfer of ownership of the married quarters estate to the private sector is expected "before the end of the year", Armed Forces Minister Nicholas Soames said in a Commons written reply on November 2.

Answering oral questions the previous week, the minister said the MoD aimed to dispose of 4,000 surplus married quarters by next summer. The sale of 20 properties to a housing association would be completed in December.

Bid to ease op theatre shortfall

MEASURES are being taken to reduce an acute shortage of anaesthetists in the Regular Armed Forces. By April 1, when the reorganisation of the Defence Medical Services will be largely complete, 95 anaesthetists will be needed, 31 more than are now serving. The situation regarding surgeons is healthier, with 117 serving, one more than required from April 1. Armed Forces Minister Nicholas Soames said in a Commons written answer on November 2: "The shortfall in anaesthetists is being addressed." The new agency being launched on April 1 to provide secondary health care for the Armed Forces will maintain 750 beds in the UK for Servicemen and women. The beds will be provided at the core military hospital at Haslar, Gosport and at support hospitals elsewhere, as well as at the three MoD hospital units – Frimley Park, Surrey; Peterborough; and Derriford, Plymouth. Mr R G Smith, former head of Lincolnshire Health Authority, has been appointed chief executive designate of the Armed Forces Secondary Care Agency. Defence Under-Secretary Earl Howe, announcing details of the agency, touched on the concerns of families when he said: "The health care of dependants is the prime responsibility of the NHS, although they may receive treatment at Service medical facilities, subject to spare capacity being available." ● With the Cambridge at Aldershot on course for closure by next April, hospital services are being transferred to Haslar, to Caterick, and to the MoD hospital units, including that at Frimley Park.

Never forget El Alamein

LACK of publicity regarding the 53rd anniversary of El Alamein on October 10 really surprised me. We were young men, fighting a war so far away from home to stop the Afrika Korps getting their hands on Egypt.

I was among fresh troops embarking on our first action when we were moved into the front line, with the Aussies to our right and the New Zealanders to our left.

I shall never forget the night of the battle, with a barrage of 800 guns, barbed wire, and mines in their thousands.

It took us 12 days to break through their defences. It was the turning point of the war and must never be forgotten. — William McMillan, The Princess Louise Scottish Hospital, Erskine Hospital, Bishopton, Renfrewshire.

Was this carved by a man in hiding?

YOUR article about the discoveries of artistic graffiti left by Second World Servicemen in Normandy (October 30) mentioned my excitement at hearing about a British example dated 1943.

It is in a building owned by a famous French novelist, Michel Bataille, and his wife Marie Claude, a sculptress. I have just driven there to see it and it is more thrilling than even I expected.

The graffiti, 24cm square, is engraved in the embrasure of a small window in a thick wall, in a hay loft on the first floor of a 15th century farm building at Thieville, 2km from St Pierre Sur Dives, not far from Lisieux. The window overlooks the church 100 metres away.

From my experiences of such writings, it is the type of work prisoners did in their cells because it is deeply and lovingly carved and obviously took a long time.

The farm was occupied by the Germans at the time but the landlady lived at the other end of the building, where the engraving was found. I cannot help thinking it is the work of a man in hiding wanting to occupy his time, but he cannot write his real name and uses a code — "Geoffrey" is in inverted commas.

The first two words (Stev and Picur?) seem to be a Christian name and a surname, but are they? I tried mixing the letters in case it was an anagram but it doesn't work.

Quite a few pilots shot down in Normandy found a hiding place before they were taken south to the Spanish frontier. The Germans, when they found British or American pilots after their plane had crashed, sent them to PoW camps in Germany and certainly did not keep them detained in a French building.

For me this is our most exciting find of the war period. Perhaps a reader can offer a key to the message. — Mme Jacqueline Wurmlinger, Friends of Graffiti, Fontaine, Normandy.

Trouble in triplicate

ARMY twins were the subject of speculation by Maj (Retd) I A D Gordon (letters, October 30).

I have a cutting from the Daily Mail of July 28, 1953 with a picture of the Kirby triplets, of Stratford, east London, who were conscripted together, given consecutive Service numbers and, I understand, served in the RAOC. Can anyone remember them?

Imagine the potential for confusion if these identical brothers completed their two-year obligation together.

Sixties mutineers cheered for good old compo rations

ON THE subject of mutinies (Soldier, Oct 2 and Nov 13), I experienced one involving French food in May 1966 while serving as a cook sergeant at Larzac Training Area near Montpellier.

There was a "down-tools"

GAELIC SLOGAN

IN THE feature on The Highlanders' new badge (September 18) you include the comment that the regiment's motto, Cuidich'n Rìgh, "remains the only Gaelic slogan used by the Regular Army".

This is not so. The Royal Irish Regiment also has a Gaelic motto, Faugh A Ballagh! (Clear the Way!).

However, The Highlanders' motto is borne on the cap badge and in this respect it is the sole Gaelic example so carried in the Regular Army. — Richard Doherty, Londonderry.

and refusal to carry on working as the advance party for the camp because the troops were sick to death of being fed in French Army messes.

When their pay ran out after buying their meals in local cafés they had had enough. The advance party officer had to contact Rhine Army HQ, who had to persuade the French authorities to allow us to have the facilities to feed ourselves.

Apparently our local catering contracts were not due to start for some time.

As cook sergeant I was given a dining room and allowed to set up a field kitchen and use the reserve composite rations to feed the troops.

When I opened the dining room doors for the first meal a terrific cheer went up from 150 or so soldiers — the first time I have ever heard a cheer for good old compo.

To my knowledge no disciplinary action was taken against our mutineers. — Ken Wilson (former ACC Cook Sgt, 31 Fld Amb RAMC, Dortmund), Leicester.

An example to follow

I READ with interest that £600,000 is to be given by a Korean conglomerate to the British Korean Veterans' Association. Can we hope this will herald a new age where countries will wish to make a contribution to welfare funds, now that they have had time to reflect on the sacrifices we made and the benefits they consequently received?

It would indeed be a gracious act if a Middle Eastern state were to acknowledge in this way our presence on the Suez Canal, when we kept open an international waterway and provided stability to the whole of that volatile area. — Harry Whitehead, Keighley, W Yorks.

Who will keep up these graves?

IN RECENT editions of Soldier there have been items on renovating and repairing war memorials, but what of our military graves' headstones?

One of my interests is the architecture of the surviving Saxon churches and during my travels I come across British Armed Forces and Merchant Navy graves as well as those of Commonwealth personnel who died in Britain in the two world wars.

They are not like the horrendous war cemeteries across Europe. Sometimes there are ten or more graves and in some churchyards only one.

I have yet to find one to complain about and this year noted that many had a Royal British Legion cross and poppy from Remembrance Sunday 1994.

You reported last year on the cuts in funding for the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. Who will continue to maintain these graves and is money available? — SMI Kevin Hyland, London Irish Rifles Cadet Company, Duke of York's HQ, Chelsea.

Tank trap

YOU referred to "AMX 10 light tanks from the 1st Cavalry Regiment of the French Foreign Legion" (October 2).

There are two vehicles designated AMX-10. One is the GIAT AMX-10 P, which is an MICV and usually carries eight infantrymen or a variety of weapon systems such as HOT anti-tank missiles.

The other is a six-wheel vehicle, the AMX-10 RC, which is equipped with skid-steering and armed with a 105 mm gun, and which is — to use the original term — a heavy armoured car.

Neither is a "tank", light or otherwise. — R C Waddington, Bewdley, Worcs.

The Italian Campaign of 1943-45 was no picnic for the British Army. A determined enemy and hostile terrain led to some of the most bitter fighting of the Second World War. The National Army Museum's latest Special Exhibition tells the story of this often overlooked campaign, with vehicles, artillery pieces, film, photographs and reconstructions of campaign life.

Welsh invade North East

THE changing role of the modern Army was highlighted at the annual camp for 160 (Wales) Brigade.

Involved were North Wales-based 3rd Battalion, The Royal Welch Fusiliers, the 2nd Battalion, The Royal Regiment of Wales, from the south of the Principality and, for good measure, members of Shropshire-based 1st Battalion, Welsh Guards to represent some opposition.

"Until fairly recently, our brigade camp would have consisted of one of the battalions being in a static position and the other battalion attacking it," said Lt Col Nick Beard, CO 3 RWF.

"This time, we were involved in a very realistic exercise - Western Dragon - given added spice because it is exactly what our Regular 1st Battalion was facing up to recently in the former Yugoslavia."

During the second week, the two battalions operated in the vast Kielder Forest, tasked to protect a United Nations humanitarian aid supply route.

Blocking their path was a militia army, in the shape of the Welsh Guardsmen, which had a vested interest in stemming the flow of aid.

The impenetrable forests of the Kielder, with single track mud and shale roads criss-crossing each other - difficult enough in normal conditions - proved a problem for the Welsh volunteers when heavy rain threatened to wash away track edges.

Long grass camouflaged drainage ditches at the roadside, and the heavy recovery vehicle from Swansea-based 223 Squadron, 157 Transport Regiment RLC, was soon busily engaged in extricating bogged-in vehicles.

was strengthening the roads, and particularly bridges, enabling the heavy vehicles of the convoys to pass in safety.

Once the two routes, with 2 RRW just below Kielder Reservoir and 3 RWF further south, had been established, the engineers from Midlands-based 107 Field Squadron, 75 Regiment RE were quickly in action, building medium and heavy girder bridges over swollen streams.

The camp was a "valuable culmination" of the training year, said Lt Col Martin Davies, CO 2 RRW.

"We practised our ambush and convoy drills and posting of sentries, and the Kielder exercise put into practice what we learned during our first week battalion phase."

There was a fine balance to make between exercising realistically and keeping the troops occupied, he added. "If it were for real, such as in Bosnia-Herzegovina, it would be over a protracted period, but as we only had a short time, there was the requirement to get a lot of points into the exercise."

"Next year, 2 RRW takes on a new role within NATO's Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps (ARRC), so this sort of exercise, particularly within the scenario of the role the Army is carrying out now, is very important," said Lt Col Davies.

From Salut, monthly magazine of the South African Defence Force: "We are not the only force preparing for the new century, adapting to the new strategic environment or providing adequate defence capabilities with ever diminishing resources."

"There are apparently many other military forces which are 'down-sizing', 'right-sizing', rationalising, integrating or re-structuring; we have much to learn from such experiences."

"We, the SANDF, on the other hand, have our own peculiar set of circumstances and have been pleasantly surprised by the interest generated by our approach towards transition and transformation."

"After some 25 to 30 years of virtual isolation we are now considered to be a full and equal member of the international military community.

"It is comforting to learn that there is genuine interest in and concern for our problems and an overwhelming willingness on the part of fellow soldiers to assist us in finding solutions." — Maj Gen Marius Oelschig, SANDF.

cally, and as such incapable of performing the more robust tasks normally assigned to male soldiers, is no longer sustainable in general terms."

"For one thing it fails to take due cognisance of the technological advances that have taken place in modern weapons systems."

Museum plea for missing history

THE Army Physical Training Corps Museum in Aldershot is asking for details of the corps' post-Second World War years to be submitted urgently, for inclusion in new displays.

As part of recent improvements, the museum has produced six exhibition boards, funded by the corps association's old and bold.

Text and photographs on the boards cover the APTC's history from its foundation in 1860 as the Army Gymnastic staff to 1945.

Joint curators Lt Col (Retd) Alec Forbes and former QMSI Jim Pearson are anxious for contributions from corps members who served during the past 50 years.

They particularly want details of life in the Palestine Canal Zone, Korea, Aden, the Falklands, the Gulf, and former Yugoslavia. Photographs are essential.

They also want to hear about

involvement in producing new physical tests such as Battle PE and the early days of adventurous and remedial training.

Memorabilia on major sporting achievements, facts on redundancy (1959 and recently), Royal Tournament displays and "on parade" occasions are other topics they would like to cover.

Items will be returned if requested, and, if not used on the boards, will be displayed elsewhere in the museum. Further details from the APTC Museum, Queen's Avenue, Aldershot, Hants GU11 2LB.

Manchester VC given to the city

THE George Stringer VC group of medals, including his Victoria Cross and Serbian Gold Medal, are to go on permanent display in the Museum of the Manchesters.

Lt Col Clive Hodges, commanding officer 1 Kings, and the Regimental Colonel, Brig Jeremy Gaskell, made the presentation to the city on November 10.

Pte George Stringer won his VC in Mesopotamia on March 8, 1916 while serving with the 1st Battalion, The Manchester Regiment.

He saved the flank of his battalion by holding his ground single-handed when a captured Turkish position at El Sinn was subjected to a heavy counter-attack.

Recruiters' challenge

PUPILS from 20 schools in Devon and Cornwall descended on HMS Raleigh in Cornwall on two consecutive days to take part in a competition organised by Exeter-based Army Schools Liaison Officer Maj Alistair Harvey RA.

Aim of the programme, in which recruiting staff from both counties were involved, was to give teachers and children an idea of life in the Army.

The ten events in the competition, which included command tasks and "grenade" throwing, were organised in such a way that the team captains had to show leadership qualities, and team members were tested both mentally and physically.

It was also an ideal opportunity for the recruiting staff allocated to each group of two or three schools to talk to pupils and teachers about Army careers.

Soldiers and officers from 29 Cdo Regt RA, 1 D and D Army Youth Team, 4 D and D, 6 LI and 211 (Wessex) Fd Hosp helped to keep the event running smoothly.

Charles Blackmore

FOLLOWING the fundamental rule that a good intro is essential if a reader's interest is to be held, Charles Blackmore's opening chapter is absolutely compelling.

Not for him a chronological start across one of the earth's largest and worst hell-holes - although this follows as it must - but a description of the death of his party's largest camel after 700 miles and two months of trekking across a dead, dangerous and unknown Chinese desert area.

It is gripping, emotional stuff and the sight of the camel being killed in ritualistic fashion because it was too injured to carry on had a tremendous effect upon him.

He wanted to end the animal's suffering immediately, but the camel handlers said no. It had to be done at dawn, with a knife and facing Mecca.

A recently retired Royal Green Jackets major and an admirer of T E Lawrence and Wilfred Thesiger among other famous explorers and adventurers, he once spent two months re-tracing Lawrence's routes around the Arabian deserts.

He found it in the College library in an atlas showing a blank, oval-shaped space. It was the Taklamakan, which translates as: "Go in and you won't come out".

It met his needs precisely: an adventure to push him to the limit, but demanding expert planning to ensure success.

This is his epic story with stunning photographs. And an excellent account it is, too. - JM

The Great Commanders by Phil Grabsky. Paperback reissue of the TV series companion. Bantam, £12.99.

Polished stories

In At The Finish by J G Smith. Minerva Press, paperback, £7.99.

EX-TROOPER Smith J G, 14435355 - "Smudger" to his pals in C Squadron, 141 Regiment RAC (The Buffs) - spins some good yarns in his memoirs of the last 11 months of the Second World War.

His recollections of the events of 50 years ago are written, staccato-style, as cameos. Almost every paragraph is a complete story in itself.

He has recorded his memories from July 1944 to May 1945 of a five-man tank crew's war from Normandy to Germany.

And good reading they make, particularly if you have been inside a Churchill, especially the flame-thrower version, a Cromwell or Sherman.

One of his longer stories - about 300 words - concerns the new colonel who, on introducing himself to the regiment, said he was a professional soldier but did not necessarily believe in spit and polish. "Bullshit," he called it.

But Smudger and his pals soon realised the officer's ideas of this basic Army requirement did not coincide with theirs. Among other things, he wanted all grease nipples to be polished and all surfaces free of dust.

However, "Smudger" and his mates survived - despite the combined demands of the colonel and the enemy. - JM

IN BRIEF

Orienteers do it in the dark

MORE than half the starters in the inaugural British Army (Germany) night orienteering championships failed to complete the course or were disqualified.

Staged in woods near RAF Bruggen, courses over 4km, 6km and 8km proved very testing for runners guided only by their hand-held torches or miners' headlights. Control markers were unlit.

First to finish in the three classes were WO1 Crosby (RASU), Lt Col Leigh (RASU) and Sig Watson (220 Sig Sqn).

Pistol matches

THE Army and Royal Navy made a much closer competition of the annual Inter-Services target pistol centre fire and standard pistol matches at Bisley Camp, but could not prevent the Royal Air Force from winning for the sixth successive year.

On the following day a Combined Services team narrowly lost to Great Britain in both centre fire and standard pistol competitions.

Capt Nick Bates QRL

CAPT Nick Bates, skipper of Redcoat III, the Army's premier offshore racing yacht, is a member of the Queen's Royal Lancers. He was incorrectly attributed to the QLR on the back cover caption (October 30 issue).

REME half marathon

SPR Rankin (65 Park Sqn RE) won the REME (Germany) half marathon in a time of 1hr 13min 27sec.

First REME runner to finish the course, which was organised by 32 Engr Regt Wksp at Hühne Garrison, was Sgt Coughan (12 Regt RA Wksp). The REME Major Unit team title was won by 32 Engr Regt Wksp for the third consecutive year, with 12 Regt RA Wksp taking the Minor Unit honours.

RAC Centre all square

RAC Centre cricketers, led by Brig Andrew Gadsby, DRAC, levelled their series against Wareham Police with a 17-run win.

Army sets the cat among clay pigeons

BARELY three months after its formation, the Army Clay Pigeon Shooting Association team conquered a high-quality Inter-Services field on the Bocking shooting ground at Braintree, Essex.

In addition to the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force, the Police and the Fire Brigade were also involved.

The Army team of 15 was chosen from a 35-strong squad of officers and soldiers, including 12 from the Royal Irish Regiment Home Service battalions.

ACPSA secretary Capt James Giggins (RLC) and WO1 Steve Butcher (RLC) led the Army challenge.

WO1 Gordon Lumsden (Scotland), Cpl Ian Caldwell (Ireland) and Pte Andrew Lipton (Northern Ireland) were among several internationals taking part.

CSjt Darrell White (1 LI) finished the day as high gun (top scorer) on 83, with SSgt

High gun CSjt Darrell White (1 LI), who returned the best overall score

Tony Masters (1 RHA) third on 81. Lumsden (R Scots) was fourth on 80. WO2 Beattie (R Irish) and WO2 Trevor Fidgett (28 Engr Regt) also finished in the Army's top five. The team scored 397, comfortably ahead of the Police on 375, the RAF (362), Fire Services (356) and the Royal Navy (292).

Football barmy

Pte Kevin Lockley comes under pressure from young footballers of St Vincent's Primary School during a competition organised by the 1st Battalion, The Black Watch at Girdwood Barracks, Belfast.

Army units based in Northern Ireland have become deeply involved in organising football opportunities for youngsters. One junior challenge competition arranged by the 1st Battalion, The Staffordshire Regiment at Ballykinler attracted teams from 40 schools throughout the country.

Many leading coaches in Northern Ireland believe the encouragement given by the Army, and the extensive facilities available on military bases, could give young players the impetus to reach the highest levels of the sport.

Brian Hamilton, the Northern Ireland manager, was among the first to praise the Army's interest in junior soccer.

Belfast children took part in a competition run by the Irish Guards on their floodlit artificial pitch at Palace Barracks in Holywood.

The long and the short of it. Army super-heavyweight Spr Danny Watts squares up to Pte Peter Charlton, the first light-flyweight in the Army squad. Behind them are coach RSM Tom O'Connor, centre, and main contenders (from left) LCpl Peter Williams, LCpl Andy Hudson, Pte Billy Bessey, Pte Darren Dugan, Cpl Chris Bessey, LBdr Vinny Jones, Cpl Vinny Powell, and LCpl Jason Gardner Lucky 13?

ALTHOUGH the British amateur boxing schedule leading up to next summer's Olympic Games in Atlanta City means there will be no traditional Inter-Service team championship this winter, the title will go to whoever wins the most divisions at the CSBA individual finals at HMS Nelson in Portsmouth on December 5-6.

Success in the Royal Navy's boxing headquarters would give the Army a 13th consecutive team crown, and coach RSM Tom O'Connor (1 Kings) believes he has the material to achieve just that, writes John Elliott.

His 25-strong squad, now in training at Aldershot, covers every weight, including for the first time a light-flyweight. Until 21-year-old Pte Peter Charlton (1 PWRR) weighed in, the Army had been unable to find anyone small enough to meet the 48kg limit.

At the other end of the scale, England representative Spr Danny Watts (36 Engr Regt) will be doing the business at super-heavyweight. Between the two extremes, coach O'Connor has a wealth of experience, including internationals Cpl Vinny Powell (lightweight, 3 RSME), Cpl Chris Bessey (light-middle, 27 Regt RLC), and Scotsman LCpl Jason Gardner (welter, Int Corps).

Combined Services champions back this season include LBdr Vinny Jones (light-heavy, 32 Regt RA), Cpl Jeff Ollerhead (middle, 1 Kings), Pte Kevin Bennett (light-welter, 7 Tpt Regt RLC), and Pte Darren Dugan (feather, 1 PWRR).

Others pushing for "first team" honours will include heavyweight Pte Billy Bessey (serving with brother Chris in 27 Regt RLC), light-welterweight LCpl Peter Williams (1 Kings), and flyweight LCpl Andy Hudson (3 UK Div HQ and Sig Regt).

Among the newcomers to the squad are two promising Royal Irishmen, LCpl Darren Boyd and Rgr Jim McCarron, and two very strong lads from 1 Para, Ptes Pete Gillespie and Danny Campbell.

O'Connor, starting his final season before leaving the Army in April, has a number of opportunities to see his less-experienced lads in action, including a novices match against the Navy at Basingstoke this month, and what is sure to be a hard-fought night against the Royal Marines, also at novice level, at the London Marriott on December 11.

Power men in action at Larkhill

POWER lifting came of age in the Army when the Service's first open championships were staged by 14 Regiment RA at Larkhill.

Cpl Kev Bownes (243 Sig Sqn) set two personal bests on his way to a 285kg total in the 67.5kg class, while Sgt Jason Legister (4 Regt RA) lifted 425kg to win the 82.5kg division ahead of Pte Jim McCormick and Sgt Bill O'Lywn (9 R Irish).

Outstanding performance of the day came from LBdr Brendan Jaynes (14 Regt RA) who lifted a total of 600kg on home ground, well ahead of closest rival Pte Joe Rogan (9 R Irish).

SPORT
Trounced by strong Alliance

Army 2, AFA 5

AMATEUR Football Alliance took advantage of the absence of several leading Army players at the Military Stadium, Aldershot to trounce the Service 2-5, their best result for years, writes Derrick Bly.

With SSgt Kevin Parkins, Sig Barney Bambrook, SSgt John Scott, LCpl Jim Strouts and Pte Steve Bowey missing, assistant coach QMSI Pat Russell was forced to make positional changes. LCpl Heath Tyson (RDG) made his debut.

Sgt Tony Wright and Pte Steve Yeo both went close before the AFA scored twice in a minute, the second from the penalty spot.

After the visitors had scored a third in the 28th minute, LCpl Joe Collins pulled one back for the Army. Two minutes later the Alliance restored their three-goal advantage.

Five minutes into the second half the Army fell further behind. Cpl Andy Woodall scored with a tremendous drive and Collins had a chance to further reduce the deficit from the penalty spot, but pulled his shot wide.

It was not the best preparation for important representative games to come against Essex and Dorset.

REME 6, Infantry 2

An Infantry side containing eight changes from their previous game could not match a strong REME team which produced fast-flowing football and deadly finishing to give them a well-deserved victory.

Cfn Woody Woodall (2), Sgt Bob Corner (2), Sgt Tony Wright and LCpl Shuggy Shaw scored for REME while Cpl John Greechan (Hldrs) and Pte Sammy McFadden (R Irish) replied for the Infantry.

The 100kg class was decided by the last lift, Bdr Greg Slocombe failing narrowly to pull a 250kg deadlift to overtake the 525kg built up by Sgt Tony Morland (1 UK) ADSR).

Sgt Morland on Herford Mil 3367 or c/o TM Troop, 1 (UK) ADSR, BFPO 15 can provide details on the sport.

Lottery delight for Gurkha

LCPL Jaybahadur Marden, serving with 2 RGR in Brunei, has something to celebrate. He became the first Gurkha to win a prize in the Army Sports Lottery when his numbers came up in the October 21 draw.

Gurkhas became eligible for the lottery several months ago following the move of their Pay and Records from Hong Kong to Exeter.

While British members of Gurkha units have won a few prizes, LCpl Jaybahadur's share of the second prize on October 21 netted him precisely £833.33 and put him in the lottery's record books.

Gurkhas wanting to join the lottery should use AF 09666 (Gurkha). Currently there are 8,000 people in the draw, with £6,000 to be won every week. Since it started, more than 1,300 winners have received £550,000.

In the past two years the Army Sports Lottery has paid out £250,000 in grants to individuals, units and associations.

Broadly speaking, the lottery helps activities and projects that do not qualify for grants from other sources, including public and welfare funds and the Nuffield Trust.

Recent large grants include £5,000 towards the Royal Signals' USA rugby tour, £3,000 for an Army badminton trip to Hong Kong, and £3,600 towards a REME cricket tour of Zimbabwe.

Army X in Cyprus final

A BRITISH Army (Germany) side performed brilliantly to reach the final of the Cyprus international ten-man rugby competition.

Having disposed of a Welsh side based on the RRW (TA), and the REME (UK) in pool matches, the Army team rose to the occasion against Fiji, winning a superb contest 17-5.

That result put them into the Winter started for these soldiers at the end of September, and they could hardly wait. As members of the four BATUS ice hockey teams they have succumbed to Canada's national sport.

Each department at Suffield has its own squad of 16. The Workshop team is the Oilers, HQ has the Sharks, 105 (BATUS) Sqn RLC has the Chieftains and the Army Air Corps are, of course, the Flyers. The teams are coached by Canadians playing for the Suffield base, and the best players from each side form the BATUS Lions team. Ready for the ice are ATpr Jeff Johnston (Flyers), LCpl Stephen Rudd (Chieftains), Cpl Paul Ogden (Sharks) and LCpl Alister Muirhead (Oilers) final against the pre-tournament favourites, a Scotland Select Ten containing British Lion Peter Wright, Scotland caps David McIvor, Shade Munroe and Derek Stark, four A caps and two junior internationals. Although first to score, the Army players eventually lost 21-45 in a match played with a pace and commitment rarely seen in Cyprus.

Cpl Zak Fazakerley and LSgt Steve Berryman were outstanding for the British Army (Germany) squad in a competition involving 24 teams from England, Scotland, Fiji, and Israel.

Where are they now?

British Army rugby players who took on the 1945-46 New Zealand Army team are sought for a reunion when the current Kiwi military XV meets the Army at Aldershot on December 13. Fourteen of the '45 tourists will be there. Several, including Fred Allen, Johnny Smith, Bob Scott and Johnny Simpson, went on to become All Blacks.

If you played in that match 50 years ago, ring Maj Bob Peedle on 0171-218 5262 (fax 0171-218 4888), or write to him at MoD RFC4, Duke of York's HQ, Chelsea, London SW3 4SS.
