Jobcentres provide new way in

Recruit Dean Stott, Jobcentre manager Maureen O'Toole and Army recruiter SSgt Linda Thompson

JOIN UP AND BE THE BEST

RECRUITING for the Armed Forces stepped firmly into the nation-wide network of Jobcentres on October 3 under a six-month trial initiated by the Defence Costs Study.

In six areas of the country, would-be recruits will initially be directed to their local Department of Employment Jobcentre rather than the nearest Army Careers Information Office.

Jobcentres will provide a filter before directing potential recruits to a tri-Services Armed Forces Careers Office.

If the trial is a success, 1,300

Jobcentres in the United Kingdom would offer the Army a much bigger shop window than do its current 136 ACIOs. The measure could also assist in attracting the increasing numbers of recruits the Army needs.

Radio and newspaper advertising will be used to direct applicants to a convenient Jobcentre in the trial areas of north Norfolk, Edinburgh, Liverpool, Gloucester, Swansea and South-East London, where ACIOs will remain open while the scheme is assessed.

● A new era of advertising for the Army has also been launched this month by the Directorate of Army Recruiting with television commercials aimed at potential officer, soldier and Territorial recruits.

The Saatchi and Saatchi campaign, built around a slogan "Be The Best", will also seek to influence friends, parents, career officers and others.

The message is that the Army offers a varied, challenging and rewarding job which helps to develop people and prepare them for life.

Fear halts mass move by Rwandan refugees

REFUGEES wanting to return to their homes in Rwanda are being intimidated and are not coming forward in as large numbers as British Army logisticians hoped.

An initial mass move of 1,500 displaced persons was successful despite the spread of rumours that there had been a massacre.

But a second movement was scaled down after only 27 refugees turned up instead of the 500 expected.

Capt Tim Muir, second in command of the British Force Transport Squadron, had to deal with the frustrations at the town of Gikongoro.

The United Nations High Commission for Refugees visits refugee camps to find out how many people want to return, and Capt Muir draws up a plan to move them back to their homes.

"We have elaborate plans with times and routes worked out, plus communications vehicles, to take the refugees back to their villages, then we either end up with half as many as we planned for, or double. We have to be very flexible," he said.

Airborne troops give power to the children

SOLDIERS from 5 Airborne Brigade have installed a new generator in the orphanage sponsored by the British contingent serving in Rwanda.

In Aldershot, wives, families and friends of the soldiers are supporting and co-ordinating the project and collecting toys for the 260 orphans.

The 20kva generator, which will provide power until mains electricity is reconnected in Rwanda, was paid for by the Overseas Development Administration and given to the Missionaries of Charity orphanage at Kigali, run by nuns from Mother Theresa's order.

In their spare time, British soldiers are rebuilding war-damaged buildings. They are also raising money to buy cooking and cleaning equipment.

Maj Mike Russell, OC 63 Airborne Close Support Squadron, said: "Installing the generator means we are leaving something behind which will see them through the next few years. It gives us a great sense of satisfaction to be able to give practical help in this way."

The toys were part of a consignment of 18 boxes collected by soldiers' families in Aldershot. Anyone who would like to donate toys, shoes, wellington boots or blankets should contact 63 Sqn's families' officer, or the 5 Brigade padre, the Rev Nigel Knights-Johnson, at the Garrison Church, Aldershot.

Lancers impress at BATUS

A YEAR after the formation of The Queen's Royal Lancers, the regiment has been declared operationally effective following an impressive performance on Exercise Medicine Man 2 at BATUS in Canada.

The exercise was the culmination of a year's intensive training since the 17th/21st Lancers and 16/5th The Queen's Royal Lancers were amalgamated.

During that time, the regiment fired on the ranges at Hohne, carried out two run-up exercises on Soltau-Lüneburg training area and made use of an American battle group simulation system at Grafenwöhr in southern Germany.

The disbandment of its band as part of the defence cuts was an emotive episode for the regiment because a band in one form or another had accompanied the constituent parts of The Queen's Royal Lancers for more than 300 years, initially to bolster morale on the battlefield later to lift morale in camp and act as stretcher bearers.

In December, the regiment begins a six-month United Nations tour as dismounted infantry in Cyprus.

TA hit squad torpedoes old factory

Thar she blows! Volunteer soldiers from 221 Field Squadron (EOD) RE(V) pose for a picture on the roof of a Second World War torpedo factory in Dumfries before demolishing it with more than 200lb of high explosive.

The 20-strong Rochester-based EOD team travelled to Dalbeattie to carry out the task, part of a ten-year programme to clear the factory site.

Under the command of Lt Andy Wood, supported by WO2 Rocky Capelhorne, they flattened a reinforced concrete building equivalent in size to a terrace of eight houses.

Sappers cede right of way to badgers

SOFT-hearted sappers from Nienburg-based 21 Engineer Regiment constructed a badger by-pass when their bulldozers threatened a thriving sett while they were improving facilities on Salisbury Plain training area.

A composite artisan and plant troop from the regiment's 4 Field Squadron and 6 (Headquarters) Squadron was tasked to carry out work at Berril Valley as part of a scheme to create a much-needed manoeuvre area for battle groups training with the Combined Arms Training Centre at Warminster.

To the sappers' dismay, the badger sett lay in the path of their heavy plant so they constructed a route around it.

Initially, the soldiers excavated three bridge sites, constructed two-and-a-half kilometres of anti-tank ditch and laid a similar distance of access track between sites.

Badger problem solved, the Royal Engineers continued with construction of the bridges which offer up to four different widths of gap. Thanks to clever design work by the Military Works Force at Chilwell, each bridge has a collapsible span providing realistic reserve demolition scenarios for battle groups on exercise.

The training facility is due to open in December.

IN BRIEF

DEFENCE Procurement Minister Roger Freeman attended the second Five Power Defence Arrangements (FPDA) conference in Singapore at the end of September. The FPDA – Australia, Malaysia, New Zealand, Singapore and the United Kingdom – was established in 1971 to provide for consultation on measures in the event of threat to Malaysia and Singapore.

A £9m contract for a command and control system to service the headquarters of the Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps (ARRC) in Germany has been awarded to Hampshire-based EDS Ltd. The system will provide more than 300 staff officers with workstations designed to withstand battlefield conditions.

RMPs join Op Grapple

A detachment of 34 Military Police from Colchester-based 156 Provost company has completed a month of intensive training including learning to speak Serbo Croat, in preparation for a six-month tour with the UN in Bosnia.

The detachment, which will form the Force Military Police Unit, is commanded by Capt Frances West.

RLC FREEDOM

Two die in Lynx accident

TWO Army Air Corps soldiers died when their Lynx helicopter crashed during an exercise in south-west Germany on September 22.

Sgt Lesley Berrisford (37) was married and came from Stoke-on-Trent. His co-pilot, Cpl Andrew John Beck (26), from Leicester, was married with two children.

Both men were serving with 1 Regiment, Army Air Corps based at Gütersloh.

At the time of the accident, they were taking part in the 1st (UK) Armoured Division's Exercise Rhino Charge 2 involving more than 2,200 troops.

The cause of the crash is being investigated.

A Paderborn-based infantry sergeant was shot dead during a live-firing infantry exercise in Canada.

Sgt Mark Frederick Powell (34) was married and serving with the 2nd Battalion, The Light Infantry in Germany. He came from Weston-super-Mare, and is the fifth British soldier to be killed this year during training exercises at the British Army Training Unit, Suffolk.

E Battery first past the post

AS MORE units return from Germany, the number of contesting teams for the annual UKLF Observation Post competition continues to grow.

This year, the entry was bigger than ever, with more than 30 forward observation officers and mortar fire controller parties taking part.

Teams were tested in a wide variety of military, general and special-to-arms skills as they strove to prove their operational readiness. Competitors also faced a number of specialist stands run by UKLF Public Information, the Copehill Down FIBUA training team, 103 Battalion, REME(V) and the Gunnery Training Team.

After 30 hours of fierce competition, E Battery, 1 RHA, driven hard by Capt Simon Humphrey, won the Regular Trophy in convincing style from C Battery, 3 RHA (Capt Mark Thornhill).

Capt Chris Reed and his team from 202 Battery, 100 Regiment RA (V) were clear winners of the TA Cup, beating off a challenge from 289 Commando Battery, RA (V) led by Capt Derek Sweeting.

The best Mortar Fire Controllers Trophy was won by Cpls James Heburn and Rhuidh MacDonald of 1st Battalion, The Queen's Own Highlanders, now The Highlanders (Seaforth, Gordons and Cameronians), operating with an FOO party of E Battery, 1 RHA.

Maj Gen Charles Vyvyan, Chief of Staff HQ UKLF, presents the Best Regular Team Trophy to E Battery RHA and the 1 QO Hldrs mortar fire controllers

Back to basics for 1 RGJ's C Coy

REPTILES and rabbits were the staple diet of 32 members of C Company, 1st Battalion, The Royal Green Jackets during a gruelling seven days of combat survival, escape and evasion run in Cyprus by Lt Peter Corbin and Sgt Tony Morell.

Normally based at Dhekelia, the company moved to Paramali to learn about navigation by stars, improvised weapons, dog evasion and water gathering. Similar skills were learned by ten grade one riflemen attending the first sniper cadre since Dover in 1989. Students had been sent on instructors' courses at the School of Infantry, Warminster, before running the cadre of three weeks of marksmanship followed by two weeks of fieldcraft.

Stalking was the hardest discipline to master, requiring high standards in all sniper skills.

A different approach to soldiering was seen by four senior ranks of 1 RGJ and four members of the 1st Battalion, The Royal Irish Regiment detached to the Israeli Defence force's Givati Infantry Brigade for five days during which they visited the Golan Heights and Sinai Peninsula.

D Company, 1 RGJ, returned from colder climes after a four-month tour of the Falklands during which the South Georgia detachment rescued a damaged Chilean trawler in high seas.

When 130 members of the Army Cadet Force visited the battalion, their hosts were impressed by A Company (The Robin Hood Rifles) from Nottinghamshire ACF who won the Light Infantry-style drill competition.

Bristol medics provide air cover

BRISTOL-based medical staff serving with 219 (Wessex) Field Hospital, RAMC (V) provided a casualty clearing station and emergency medical cover at this year's Fairford international air tattoo in Gloucestershire as part of their annual camp. During the deployment, the hospital's Quartermaster's Stores shared a hangar with a recently-restored Mk 9 Spitfire fighter aircraft whose past history records a "kill" on D-Day.

Ian's Frank exchange

Boxing day came early for Sgt Ian Grant, AGC (SPS) when former heavyweight champion Frank Bruno dropped into Headquarters British Forces Hong Kong during his preparations for a bout with Ray Mercer of the United States – part of a HK$100m fight bill at the new Hong Kong stadium on October 23. Just watch that left hook – know wot I mean, Ian?

General discussion

Artificer SSgt Steve Bromby, REME attached to The King's Royal Hussars, briefs Maj Gen Anthony de Camborne Leask, Commander Land Forces, during the general's visit to the regiment's barracks in Northern Ireland. He and Defence Secretary Malcolm Rifkind were among a number of senior officers who were sampling at first hand the daily routine of a soldier's life within the camp.

A unique combination

Picture: Mike Perring

Wartime glider pilot Peter Gammon and former RAF flight lieutenant Don Saunders have a rather unique relationship. The two men are thought to be the only surviving combination of tug and tow pilots from the Battle of Arnhem. Don, flying a 233 Squadron Dakota, towed Peter's Horsa glider to the landing zone. For several days afterwards he braved German flak and fighters to drop food and ammunition to 1st Airborne Division soldiers dug-in around Oosterbeek. Don was recently presented with the US Air Medal for his services during the battle, 50 years after the event.

Med Herring . . .

New commanding officer of Newcastle-based 201 (Northern) General Hospital, RAMC (V) is Col David Herring. After commanding another part-time TA unit, David, a consultant surgeon and urologist in Durham, returned to 201 as OC Surgical Division before taking up the post.

GREAT SCOTT!

Gen Sir Michael Wilkes, the Adjutant General, presents a framed certificate of commendation to his personal assistant, Sgt Dawn Scott, AGC (SPS), who has worked for him in outstanding fashion for the past three years. It is the first time the AG had awarded his commendation.

Lancers try some new territory

For at least two members of The Queen's Royal Lancers it has been a case of getting a change of scenery of late. 2nd Lt Nigel Best (left) recently finished an attachment to the German 143 Panzer Battalion at Stadt Allendorf. He went with the unit to Canada – where he is pictured in the turret of a Leopard 2 main battle tank – to carry out brigade training, with the aim of seeing the German Army at work at battle group level. Fellow QRL officer Lt Will Packard was given the opportunity to fly a Sea King helicopter during a visit to the regiment's affiliated ship, HMS Ark Royal. He witnessed the Royal Navy at work and play as the ship patrolled off Bosnia providing back-up for Operation Deny. He later visited Malta with the aircraft carrier.

Handing over the reins, metaphorically speaking, to his successor at Catterick Garrison is Garrison Corporal Major WO1 Richard Stephenson (left). Taking over from WO1 Stephenson on his retirement after 24 years in The Life Guards is WO1 Neil Oswin (Queen's Royal Lancers), who reverts to the more familiar title of Garrison Sergeant Major after the Life Guards' slightly different ranking system. By coincidence, Richard and Neil have been friends for years since serving together in Canada.

Part-time paras on target for busy time

THE GREEN flag on the control tower was exchanged for red.

A moment's silence ... then, taking their cue from a rapid burst of small arms fire, the three tanks trundled menacingly on parallel paths in the direction of the ridge and the sea beyond.

Following them, the infantry edged forward to attack "Oscar One", the first of two objectives as they set about achieving their big prize: the high ground overlooking Brandy Bay.

The men from 10th Battalion, The Parachute Regiment (Volunteers) were taking part in a live-firing exercise on the Westholme Heath ranges at Lulworth Cove.

Hours earlier, at 0400, 80 men had floated silently on to the nearby drop zone.

The hard ground caused a few injured limbs, but the main casualty was a planned assault from the sea. Weather conditions prevented two landing-craft from getting in to secure a beachhead.

Undaunted, soldiers from Yankee Company in the assembly area went ahead with the scheduled attack, throwing themselves into the demanding exercise which formed the culmination of their annual camp.

A year ago they practised a defensive role: this time they were involved in quite the opposite – a joint rolling attack.

The all-Arms exercise, which involved Chieftain main battle tanks and Scimitar reconnaissance vehicles, was run entirely by the Territorial Army, with Regulars acting as safety advisers.

Visiting them on the day was Director of Infantry Maj Gen Ray Pett, one of several VIPs – including the Commander of 5 Airborne Brigade, Brig John Holmes – who dropped in over the two-day period.

Phase One of training had begun at Sennybridge camp, where valuable practice in live-firing had been carried out at section and platoon level.

While Yankee Coy were active at Lulworth, X-Ray Coy were cooling their heels at Bovington Camp, from where they were flown to RAF Lyneham to repeat the exercise in the early hours of the following morning.

But the rigours for 10 Para – one of 17 cap badges, including the 9th/12th Royal Lancers and two platoons from the American 82nd Airborne Division, represented on the exercise – were not over.

The battalion took part in an airborne assault on Holland, a complete contrast involving ceremonial duties at the Arnhem 50th anniversary commemorations, and a fair amount of tabbing.

Ceremonies over, the part-time paras completed a four-day field training exercise in the Arnhem area, clearing enemy enclaves over a 50km stretch.

To round things off they carried out an assault on a Dutch/Belgian FIBUA (fighting in built-up areas) village.

But still the men of the 10th had not finished.

Back on British soil, the final phase of their camp consisted of an airborne assault on Salisbury Plain's parachute training area and an attack for which each soldier carried assault weapons and a minimum of 50lb in their bergens.

"This year's camp was particularly demanding," said 10 Para commanding officer Lt Col Bob Kershaw.

With the exception of Arnhem, where the Terriers were accommodated in barracks, all five phases were in the field.

"A battle inoculation exercise gets officers and men used to the sights and sounds of battle, as well as carrying weights and having to talk to tanks."

"If they achieve all that, they will have done very well."

As the left-hand platoon moved into the attack at Lulworth, following the Chieftains, plumes of smoke billowed from the battlefield and mortars exploded. Oblivious to the frenetic goings-on so close to them, motorists on the adjacent busy West Country road drove on as normal.

From a distance, the paras, moving slowly in the direction of the ridge, weapons across their chests, gave all the appearance of beaters on a Scottish moor in August.

But the smell in the air was from a heavier sort of gun, and their targets were of the human, not feathered, variety.

As the Milan platoon behind them also began their sortie into enemy territory, men began to carry back casualties – in reality man-sized weighted dummies.

Prisoners-of-war (in uniforms bought in Berlin) were taken.

"By the end of the camp, I reckon we will have covered 180km on our feet," said one of the officers, "but in terms of experience it will have been worth every minute."

Sappers ease village fears

SAPPERS from 62 Cyprus Support Squadron went to the aid of villagers threatened by overhanging boulders in the Troodos mountains.

Following an approach from the Cypriot Works Department, nine soldiers from the squadron were tasked to move rocks perched precariously above Moutoullas.

During the two weeks it took them to complete the assignment the sappers were visited on site by Commander British Forces, Maj Gen Alex Harley, and the Permanent Under Secretary for Comms, Works and Services. The VIPs were flown in with a Cypriot TV crew.

Delighted villagers rewarded the engineers with a meal and appropriate refreshment in a local restaurant.

The squadron completed several other projects during the summer, including the construction of a 250m road at Akrotiri and a mole and small jetty at the Cyprus Joint Services Adventure Training Centre, and the levelling of the polo pitch at Episkopi.

A section from the squadron's Field Troop under the command of SSgt Colin Elton provided lighting for the entrance to the Monastery of Cats, built on the site of a Byzantine monastery at Akrotiri. Two trenches had to be dug to house cables for lamp posts along the driveway, and the posts concreted in place.

The new mole at CJSATC was completed by a section of sappers and an RE diving team after weeks of back-breaking work. The original site had to be abandoned after divers found an underwater rock shelf which would have prevented the berthing of an RCL.

A party from the squadron flew to Fort Carson in Colorado Springs, USA for a climbing and walking exercise. The trip ended with a white water rafting on the Arkansas River.

● A charity raft race organised by 62 Cyprus Support Squadron earlier in the year raised £4,000 for Great Ormond Street Hospital for Children and local Cypriot charities.

10 Para in action – from Lulworth Cove to Arnhem

The major and the muleteer

NEVILLE Hogan could not wait to join the Army.

In August 1939, three weeks after his 16th birthday, he purloined his brother's birth certificate, presented himself in front of "the tallest Tank Corps sergeant major he had ever seen" and found himself enlisted as a private in the Burma Auxiliary Force.

Several escapades followed, including "killing his first chap" with a pistol in 1942 when Neville was in an armoured car unit and the assailant threatened to throw a grenade into the vehicle.

Swimming rivers, driving lorries loaded with aviation spirit between Mandalay and Meiktila and, after washing the truck, doing the return journey with wounded as cargo – occasionally being strafed by Japanese – proved excellent grounding for action with the Chindits to come.

Then, in 1943, Neville, a member of the Karen hill tribe, was commissioned into the 2nd Battalion, The Burma Rifles.

A unit of the 3rd Indian Infantry Brigade, 2 BR was a composite battalion of Karens, Chins and Kachins whose role – because of their intimate knowledge of Burma and its people – was to act as a reconnaissance unit for the long range penetration group.

"My job as a recon platoon commander was to march a day or two ahead of the main column with mules and a wireless set and glean information on enemy movements, sometimes sending my Karens into villages in native dress," said Neville.

"It was also vital to find water and food (raw rice, eggs and so on, bought with rupees and sovereigns) to leave in wax boxes hung in the trees for collection by the column."

Platoons such as Neville's would also reconnoitre for suitable supply drop areas and places from which wounded could be airlifted, putting out markers for the planes to deliver, for example, boots and – for the mules – hay.

Five decades have passed since Orde Wingate's specially-trained Chindits infiltrated the enemy lines and paved the way for victory in Burma. Two veterans, from very different backgrounds and ranks, recall their experiences of the conflict

Youthful officer: Neville Hogan in his uniform days

"It was always the Burma Riflemen's job to retrieve parachutes which floated towards the Japs, and it always seemed to be the mail," said Neville.

"I didn't realise at the time the amount of responsibility involved." He had 60 lives under his control, and the main column of 400 following behind him.

Neville Hogan's war-time story has the makings of a novel.

One of only five indigenous officers in the Burma Rifles, he met his wife, Glory, in 1944 when, following orders, he broke into a civilian internment camp run by the Japanese.

He found the teenage girl from the village of Bassein making rice cakes for her captors – who were also holding her parents and three brothers.

They lost touch, but met again at a badminton party in 1947 at an officers' training centre in Maymyo, where he had been sent as a demonstration company commander.

Neville and Glory, pictured right, married in 1949 and settled in England in the 1950s.

In February 1943 the 3,000-strong Chindit force (the 77th Brigade) crossed the Chindwin river in two groups, with the intention of penetrating enemy lines in Burma.

After an abortive attempt, under Orde Wingate's direction, to cross the Irrawaddy, the columns suffered appalling hardships on a lengthy march back to Assam.

Although more than 2,000 members of the force returned, most were never fit to serve again.

A second expedition flew into enemy-held territory in March of the following year – the force having been increased to about 9,000.

They were given the daunting task of establishing strongholds which would be supplied by air.

Wingate was killed in an air crash before he could see his plan go fully into action, but it is generally held that his two missions played their part in causing the Japanese to change their plans – and increasing morale at home.

Travelling on foot through the jungle could be hazardous.

Word would be passed down a column to stop and any soldier wishing to relieve himself would leave the trail, never alone, counting the number of steps before digging a hole and – most importantly – noting who was behind and in front of him in the column.

"Many were never seen again. The jungle is so thick that no one can hear you, and the column just moves on," said Neville, who spent his 21st birthday in hospital, suffering from a gunshot wound and typhus.

During the ensuing 12 months, he was a member of a small SOE-type organisation

Reminiscing: John Hesketh in bush hat

codenamed Force 136, working alongside two members of the Royal Signals and an explosives expert.

While based in Maymyo, with the task of preventing a vital bridge (partially built, coincidentally, by his great grandfather) from being blown up, he was ordered to investigate civilian internment camps in the region.

Cutting through barbed wire in the early hours at one camp, Neville found the place almost deserted and ascertained that reports of beatings were unfounded.

He also met a beautiful young internnee... but that is another story.

At another, much further south near the town of Ye where military prisoners from the notorious Railway of Death were being interned, he took advantage of lax Japanese security at night to smuggle in quinine, morphine and other medical supplies to alleviate the PoWs' suffering.

Neville, who was promoted major in December 1944, celebrated his 22nd birthday a month before the end of the Second World War – with a hard-boiled egg.

But the Chindit's adventures were still not over. He remained in the Army until 1949, resigning his commission after Burma's independence. In the intervening period he was captured by Burmese rebels, escaped from an officers' mess, and married the girl he had met in the prisoner-of-war camp before ending up as an insurance executive in England in the 1950s.

Now the national vice-chairman of the Chindits Old Comrades Association, he looks back on the Burma campaign with little sentiment.

"My lasting memory of those days is of just being tired, hungry, wet, sweaty and frightened," he said.

"If you were going downhill, you knew you had to go up another. Your guts were coming out, you had blisters on your hand from hacking all day, but there was a great sense of comradeship, of pure love for each other from all ranks."

At the time, he admitted, he had not appreciated the importance of the Wingate expedition, with troops "sitting on the line of the road and rail communications" to thwart the Japanese.

"As a young officer, I was only really thinking about what was 100 yards in front or behind me, and where the next grub was coming from."

"If I had known what was happening, I would have got up and run away, volunteered for a patrol and never come back, attacked a few Japs and made my way to India..."

John Hesketh's war couldn't have been more different. A bombardier, his exploits had included a stint in Egypt in 1941 as a Bren and anti-tank gunner until his regimental colonel volunteered his entire complement to help fellow RA officer Orde Wingate.

"We handed over our guns and became infantry," said John, who suddenly found himself part of 51/69 Column, 16th Brigade, Royal Artillery, led by the monocled Maj (later Brig) Bernard Fergusson.

"The training was worse than the actual thing. It was very hard, and we lost men crossing rivers."

The erstwhile gunner was transformed overnight into a muleteer, or mule-leader, in the flame-thrower section, accompanied by his faithful steed Jessica, who carried five days' rations in cardboard boxes. "We marched and marched until we were due to go into action for the first time, about three to four hundred miles behind the Japanese lines.

"While we were marching with Fergusson's brigade, another brigade went in by glider, landing on jungle strips with nicknames such as Picaddily and White City."

John missed out on the action (51 had the job of attacking Lon King) because at the last minute it was decided that only one flame-thrower was needed.

"The Japs were prepared. In their fox-holes they had dogs which started barking to warn them of any approach. We lost two men and quite a few were wounded. One chap got the Military Medal."

Marching with a mule was not the easiest of tasks, as the intrepid Hesketh soon discovered.

"If I got too far behind, they would post a man further along the trail to show which way the column had gone.

"On one occasion, I reached a junction and there was no one in sight, so I got down on my knees looking for mule prints, without success.

"I went off the track, tied the mule up, unloaded and tied a rope to two trees to trip any unwelcome visitors. Then I covered the mule, camouflaged the packs and walked into the jungle."

It suddenly dawned on him that he was on his own.

But he knew that there was a supply drop that night, so reasoned that if he saw the parachutes drop, that was the direction he should go.

"I saw them, went to sleep, and the next thing I knew, I was being woken up by a search party!"

Another incident etched on his mind was a visit by Wingate to headquarters, where a comparative banquet had been arranged.

"What are the troops on?" he had asked.

On being told "K rations", he had ordered that the food be cleared away and that the officers should have the same as the men.

Crossing the Chindwin was "like Bank holiday Monday at Southend-on-Sea: all the columns caught up with each other, and the mules proved to be troublesome.

"Some were pushed across, others had to be towed," said the 83-year-old.

Like Neville Hogan, he has few sentimental feelings about the campaign, preferring instead to remember the more humorous aspects, such as the panic caused when the message "Gap in column" filtered down the line, the first word having been unaccountably altered somewhere along the way to "Jap".

"We weren't really brave," he told Soldier. "I wasn't among the lot who actually did the fighting. It was a waste of time, and expensive in the way of human life - especially the first campaign."

"They didn't know what to expect, and the casualties were terrible. At least we knew what to expect, and had improved dropping zones."

His war ended in Germany, where he guarded farms against raids by displaced persons - and spent a grim night on guard duty at Belsen.

Then it was back to his pre-war job as a supervisor at a brewery not far from his present flat in Roehampton, south London.

On winter nights, he writes to old comrades from the Chindits.

"After the war, a lot of those who had been out there died in their 50s from heart failure," said John. "I saw a lot of brave things in Burma which should have received recognition, and it was usually the blokes who said the least who were the bravest."

In stitches: Pte Glen Conroy is given a demonstration by Donna Duggan at Brynmawr

WHILE their pals from the 1st Battalion, The Worcestershire and Sherwood Foresters Regiment, were busy with a Northern Ireland tour, the rear party at Tidworth were being shown all there is to know about skiving.

But before the accusations start flying, a fuller explanation should be offered.

Skiving, in its less pejorative form, is the art of paring or splitting the flesh from the back of an animal to leave just a leather hide.

And this craft, together with the even more esoteric skill of clicking, proved an eye-opener to seven curious Woofers who crossed the Severn Bridge to see how the boots which play such a vital role in their Army lives are made.

In the early 1920s, when Wales had a flourishing coal industry, a factory was established at Brynmawr, Gwent, to make boots for miners.

These days, it is boots for soldiers which make up a goodly proportion of business for G B Britton, who took over the establishment more than 40 years ago.

In particular, the firm's new combat assault boot (CAB), which came into service earlier this year and has been seen on the streets of Northern Ireland and in Bosnia, is making inroads into the traditional combat boot niche.

"Comparing the CAB to others is like comparing a Bentley to a Ford," said factory manager John Haggett, who is naturally delighted with the MoD contract.

The manufacturing operation is split between Brynmawr

Simply boot-iful!

- where the leather is cut and the uppers prepared - and Brittons' factory in Bristol, where the process continues, from the complex task of adding the soles through to the final packaging.

"To comply with European law, everything from leather to stitching to eyelets has to be certified before we can use it," said Mr Haggett.

"The combat boot means a great deal to the people in this factory: every boot is examined individually before it leaves here."

Long before that, the raw material is subjected to close scrutiny and spoilt areas of the large slabs of hide (caused by anything from operation scars to barbed wire or branding marks to fly bites) are rejected.

The all-important "clickers", named years ago after the sound of the knife clicking at great speed, select and cut the best parts of the leather, which are used in the front of the boots, the rough boots are stitched and insoles attached to the lasts. A silver stamp mark on the raw material indicates where the stitching should be done.

Stitching of uppers and sealed, waterproof, leather lining complete, and now in a more recognisable form, the products - duly trimmed and examined - are tied in bundles of 24 "rights and lefts" for daily dispatch to Bristol.

Each boot - prepared these days on plastic, as opposed to traditional wood, "left and right" lasts - is stamped inside to indicate the week the leather was cut, by which clicker, and the date it was sent out.

For ease of access by MoD inspectors, the leather for Army boots is kept separate from Brittons' other products.

Thelma Denning shows the lads from 1 WFR the finished product which leaves the Brynmawr factory

An hour or so away, at the firm's Bristol premises - also formerly a miners' boot factory - the second part of the manufacturing process goes into action.

"We have got a good relationship with the Army, and we hope to strengthen it and keep it," said factory manager Martin Ireland.

Only the best workers were used on the MoD contracts side, with no trainees involved, he added, as the party of Woofers was whisked round the shop floor.

Toes are shaped over lasts and the all-important soles are moulded by injection under intense pressure.

"We are very proud of recent developments," said Mr Ireland.

"There has been a wind of change at the MoD, and the CAB is a major leap forward. It has not just been thrown together: a lot of thought has gone into it."

Once excess material has been removed, the boots are washed, polished, laced and packed.

"A soldier's feet are his most important asset," the manager added, "so we take care that air bubbles, for example, are removed, so that there is nothing detrimental to the wearer of the boot."

Reaction from Woofers who have been wearing the CABs for months was encouraging.

"They are a better boot all round than the combat highs," said one.

"They are more supple, have more flexibility and are more comfortable."

Although increased needs have meant that the factory floor has had to be built over the firm's former cricket pitch, the usurping of white boots by those of a more bellicose nature can only be good news for Army and manufacturer.

"We hope that you now have a much clearer idea of what goes into making the end product," said Martin Ireland, as he gave one of the youthful Woofers a quick lesson in correct lacing.

"It's a two-way process, and we welcome any recommendations."

To him and George Bryant Britton (1857-1929), the sound of seven pairs of boot-clad feet echoing down the stairs after an enlightening visit must have been music to their ears.

Nat's long service at Wilton is recognised

Mrs Natalie Nutting (pictured above) has received the Imperial Service Medal from the C-in-C, Gen Sir John Wilsey, to mark 36 years of service to the Crown.

Nat to her friends, Mrs Nutting has worked as a typist at Wilton – first in HQ Southern Command, later HQ UKLF – since the early 1950s.

Her first job was as a typist in a regimental pay office in Salisbury, and her first "office" at Wilton was a large tin hut. Since then she has witnessed the transformation of the headquarters into today's purpose-built complex.

Common approach over new pay slip

NEW, simpler pay statements common to all Regular officers and soldiers are due to be introduced this month.

Issue to the Territorial Army and Royal Irish Regiment (HSPT) will follow later.

The innovation has come about as part of the move towards greater standardisation and rationalisation of administrative procedures.

The old-style officers' statement – AF O 9538 – contrasted in almost every aspect to the soldiers' AF O 9537 pay slip. Size, shape and content differed, as did presentation.

Officers' pay slips were sealed, while those for other ranks were manually folded and stapled by units prior to issue.

Questionnaires go out to 8,000 Bett Review: No savings targets

By Michael Bett

Chairman of the Independent Review of Armed Forces' Manpower, Career and Remuneration Structures

IT IS almost six months since the Armed Forces Independent Review was set up by the Secretary of State for Defence. I thought that the midway point might be a good time to explain how the review team is tackling the task that we have been given.

The purpose of the review is to ensure that the Armed Forces continue to be able to recruit and retain people of the right quality into the 21st century.

We have been asked to consider how the Services' pay and allowances structures, pensions, rank and career structures, housing and accommodation policy, as well as terms and conditions of service, can best be designed to meet this longer-term need.

The other members of my review team are Tony Vineall (former personnel director of Unilever), Michael Garner (ex-finance director of Tube Investments) and Sir John Kerr (recently retired as Commander-in-Chief, Naval Home Command).

We are supported in our work by a project team of Service officers and civilians. We are working very closely with all three Services and are very grateful to them for arranging an extensive series of fact-finding visits to front line and support areas.

We have visited units in the UK, Northern Ireland, Italy and Bosnia and we are to visit Germany shortly. We have visited ships and submarines.

We are also visiting Armed Forces of other countries and looking at the Police and at major companies in this country.

My colleagues and I have greatly valued the opportunity to discuss a number of issues directly with Service personnel in all ranks and their spouses, and to hear the views of the young, as well as of the more senior.

These visits have left us very impressed by the calibre, professionalism, ethos and education of today's Servicemen and women. It is our prime concern to ensure that those qualities remain with the Armed Forces in the next century, and that our work makes a positive contribution towards enhancing operational effectiveness.

We fully recognise that the Services are not commercial organisations and we have no intention of proposing inappropriate business practices.

But it would be wrong for anybody to assume that the Services have nothing to learn from good practice elsewhere.

I would also like to emphasise the independent nature of the review. I know there will be speculation and a great deal of jumping to conclusions as we go about our business, ask questions and test our ideas.

However, I can assure you that – whatever the newspapers may say – we have not yet reached any conclusions, and will not do so before early next year.

We are not part of the Defence Cost Studies and although we are concerned to promote better value for money, savings targets have not been set for the review. Nor are we responsible for recommending pay levels. That remains the responsibility of the Pay Review Bodies.

Finally, I would like to thank all those who are making our visits so interesting and informative. They really are invaluable in helping us to understand more about the Services.

But the number of visits we can make is inevitably limited and, because we wish to get the views of as many Service people as practicable, we shall be sending questionnaires over the next few weeks to about 8,000 further Servicemen and women.

I trust that they will find the time to complete them and return them to us promptly so that we can have the benefit of their views when we come to formulate our recommendations on how to ensure that our Armed Forces remain among the very best in the world.

ARMY parents returning from overseas – or merely on the move in the UK – would be well advised to consult one or other of two paperback books recently published.

The 1995 edition of the well-established Equitable Schools Book gives you as good a reason as any.

"Choosing the right secondary school is probably the last critical decision your children will allow you to make for them," it says. "And they won't thank you for just sticking a pin in a league table or relying on other people's judgement."

This "independent guide to independent secondary schools", produced in association with The Sunday Times, reports on 550 such establishments, including 25 British schools overseas.

Its 878 packed pages also include a guide to issues such as dyslexia and bullying and special advice about fees.

Lighter at 438 pages but no less valuable is The Sunday Times State

Norway 'patch' up and running in the far north

AFTER a sometimes traumatic move from Oslo to Stavanger on the west coast of Norway, United Kingdom Support Element HQ NORTH (formerly HQ AFNORTH), is reported to be "alive and kicking".

The unit, situated in a brand new office complex rented from the Norwegians, provides admin support to 75 British tri-Service personnel at the new NATO headquarters.

Biggest problem for the element was housing all its personnel. Not only were the British support staff in competition with their NATO allies, but also with the many oil companies based in Norway's "oil capital".

After testing the market it was decided to acquire purpose-built housing, meeting married quarter scales, from a Norwegian leasing company.

The final phase is now nearing completion and all who have arrived so far have been housed.

Families serving there highly recommend a posting to Stavanger. It is in a beautiful part of Norway, well situated as a base to explore the country.

FAW conferences give you chance to have your say

THE SEASON of political conferences is upon us, and the Federation of Army Wives is about to launch its own series of annual get-togethers.

Cyprus, Germany and the UK have conferences coming up and Sherie Williams Ellen, speaking in Counterpoint, made the point that they provide an opportunity for women to ask questions about issues which they feel affect them.

The last conference I attended was in Germany and what struck me was the diversity of the women involved with FAW.

Communication between different branches seems good. I asked Sherie if, for example, someone raised a question in Cyprus that had implications for all Army wives, could it be passed along to other conferences for discussion?

Yes, she said, it could. And if a matter was raised before the UK conference it could be researched before the conference.

So, in theory, if you're overseas and you've come up with an issue which you think should be discussed, go to your local conference.

The level of debate depends entirely on the commitment of those taking part. If there is a chance to go to any of the conferences, please do. If you can't get there, send the Federation your comments.

While we were talking, Sherie referred to the Army Wives Journal. It is evolving all the time and recent issues will concentrate on exploring big issues.

The team that put the Journal together are not afraid of a little controversy either. Asked if she thought people with influence read the magazine, Sherie said that whenever there was something in it with potential to raise a few hackles a reaction always got back to them.

If you'd like to see the Journal or your unit isn't getting copies, do get in touch with the Federation of Army Wives. If you don't have a local co-ordinator drop them a line at HQ UKLF, Old Sarum.

The contact number for SSAFA's London Homeless Division in this column (October 3) was incorrect. The right number is 071-377 0866 – and they still need blankets, men's warm clothes and non-perishable foods.

The last job I had overseas was helping BFBS build one of its small, local radio stations in Hohne. It was an exciting time and the response of the community was overwhelming.

If you're posted to an area around Wiltshire, Surrey and Hampshire, the good news is that you will be able to pick up Forces FM, a local "out-station" of BFBS during October (see Soldier October 3).

Drop me a line and let me know if you hear the programme.

You can contact Cari at BFBS, BFPO 786 or c/o Soldier.

RAGGED WAR

The Story of Unconventional and Counter-Revolutionary Warfare

Leroy Thompson

Guerrilla warfare, terrorist and revolutionary activities have become an increasing part of the modern world causing democracies worldwide to engage in counter-insurgency operations. Written by a warfare expert, this sharp, readable study demonstrates how traditional military action has been sacrificed in order to counter the development of more 'ragged', irregular war tactics. Fully illustrated with unusual and stunning action photographs, this historical examination of strategic progress gives a fascinating insight of 'ragged' war which has its origins in the dawn of warfare.

GUNS OF THE ELITE:

The Special Forces Firearms, 1940 to the Present

George Markham

Foremost in the struggle against terrorism are the special forces. This book provides a penetrating account of the weapons of these elite fighters. Special Forces have risen to prominence in the last thirty years as their special fighting skills have involved them in delicate operations. The availability on the open market of weapons that were once confined to military service has allowed terrorists to equip with weapons of the utmost sophistication, forcing the Special Forces to seek ever-better equipment to meet the threat. These developments are reflected in the extensive changes now made in the Guns of the Elite since 1987. Topics covered include: handguns; compact sub-machine guns; rifles; shotguns; and, ammunition and its effectiveness.

User-friendly Naafi now on line

A NEW telephone ordering system which will replace all previous arrangements for messing in every British military establishment has been set up by Naafi, writes Phil Wilcox.

Introduced on October 1, the telesales system – linked with a central storage warehouse for speedy despatch – comes as a direct result of an MoD agreement for Naafi to take over operation of the Public Messing Fund (PMF) contract for a three-year period, in tandem with the tri-Service Directorate of Services Food Management.

To meet the expected increased demand, an additional distribution centre to the present building in Amesbury, Wiltshire, will open next year at Grantham, Lincolnshire and a third, in Edinburgh, has been leased.

Every working day, a team of operators at Amesbury will call every catering location at a pre-set time to take their orders.

Each cookhouse has an account number and a price list of 1,500 items, ranging from sliced beans to steaks, to choose from. Orders taken by the tele-ordering team are keyed into the computer system, automatically generating an assembly note in the distribution centre and assembled for loading.

Specially trained: Naafi telesales operator Jocelyne Hornbuckle

The whole process, from order to delivery, takes two working days, with the aim of distributing produce such as fruit and vegetables with a least three days' shelf life still in the product.

A helpline is also available to cope with problems, though the system is claimed to be flexible enough to cope with emergencies such as increased orders because of a sudden influx of troops.

Fresh, frozen and chilled produce will be delivered three days a week to 920 delivery points throughout the UK (dry goods on the other two) by a fleet of 81 vehicles.

In Germany, a 29-vehicle fleet will deliver to 250 points.

"The new service will be a great improvement, both in terms of the food on offer and the delivery system," said Col John Houchin, Naafi's Army director.

"It means benefits such as delivery direct to the kitchen door at much shorter notice, as opposed to, say, two weeks in advance. It adds enormously to Naafi's flexibility and in addition involves a substantial financial saving for the MoD."

The Army has 470 establishments served by PMF, including 175 in Germany and ten ships.

Naafi buys 30 million eggs each year and enough sausages to stretch from Salisbury Plain to Inverness. Most popular lines bought by soldiers are frozen chips and crisps.

BFBS brings community radio to N Ireland

BFBS Northern Ireland was a year old in June but had to wait until September 3 for its birthday present – a new transmitter, writes Gordon Skilling.

Traditionally a lifeline for British soldiers and their families based overseas normally without access to the programmes they like, the British Forces Broadcasting Service now has a closed-user transmitter in Northern Ireland.

It serves a Germany-based unit in the Belfast area, broadcasting within the unit's buildings but not outside, and makes the city the first in the UK to receive BFBS on a full-time basis.

Located in the HQ NI complex at Lisburn, BFBS NI is run from a portable building which was destined for the Gulf but never made it because the war ended so quickly.

The station itself is a two-year trial and has been making programmes for Germany and Bosnia/Croatia for over a year, raising the profile of British Forces in Northern Ireland among the British public and overseas commands.

It also aims to link Germany-based units with their families.

As well as providing a service to British soldiers, BFBS NI doubles as a vehicle for sending news items back to Great Britain and Germany.

Station manager is Jon Bennett, who is on attachment from BFBS London and has been "everywhere except Belize" with BFBS over 15 years. He was station controller in the Gulf War.

He and assistant Emma Davies concentrate on covering "good news" stories, ranging from human interest to cross-community events.

Their primary role is to provide a link between roulement units from Germany and their families. Dedications are recorded and broadcast on "Ulster Calling" every Saturday (1100-1300 BST, 1200-1400 CET) carrying on a tradition from years gone by when "Ulster Calling" was done by the BBC and presented by various people – including Gloria Hunniford.

The link is strengthened by arranging for recorded dedications to be broadcast on units' local radio stations at home.

Dedications for "Ulster Calling" can be telephoned via Fastnet 40924 for broadcasting on the next show, and since September 3, families and friends have also been able to make dedications for soldiers listening in Belfast by calling UK 846 601426.

New technology enables BFBS NI to provide local radio stations with a well-oiled service. Previously, material had to be sent in the post or via the London office – a very time-consuming and expensive operation.

BFBS NI is now able to send news direct to the local radio's receiver, at a fraction of the cost. Local stations do not have to pay for this service, which also saves them the expense of sending a reporter to the unit and should raise the unit's profile "back home".

The whole operation is very cost-effective, said Mr Bennett. "Before the Gulf War it would have cost £100 an hour to transmit a stereo programme from Northern Ireland to Germany after booking a line six weeks in advance.

"Our first three months of operation cost only £600 for four hours live, daily, to the whole network including features, and reports, dialling to anywhere with no testing and no booking."

On the television front, coverage of events is broadcast on SSVC's magazine programme Scene Here. Much of the work is bi-medial, with the soundtrack dubbed and used to compile a radio feature – which doubles the amount of coverage a unit receives.

The new trial transmitter runs 24 hours a day. Programmes are distributed by satellite and produced in London, Germany and in Lisburn and reflect a change throughout BFBS.

The daytime service used to come from London, but from the end of June the main day output has been transmitted from BFBS Germany.

Since the new transmitter went into operation, soldiers have been able to hear the same programmes as their wives in Germany during the day. BFBS London caters for evenings and weekends.

Germany is still a high priority, but the emphasis is changing with drawdown, and BFBS NI concentrates equally on Germany and Britain-based units.

Having a full-time transmitter within UK will be quite a landmark, said Mr Bennett, who hopes the service will be extended to all units to provide "community radio" for the forces in Northern Ireland.

"Community radio is coming all over UK and ultimately, I would like to see us with a proper dedicated BFBS service as in Cyprus and Germany," he said, "but we'll see how the trial goes first."

MORE THAN 2,000 Arnhem veterans and 100,000 Dutch and British spectators braved high winds and driving rain to watch 800 paratroopers mark the 50th anniversary of the 1st Airborne Division's part in Operation Market Garden.

The mass airborne landing on the original wartime drop zone at Ginkel Heath included troops from the British Army's 5 Airborne Brigade, the 10th Battalion, The Parachute Regiment (Volunteers) and the Special Air Service.

New Zealand special forces and airborne troops from South Africa, Canada, Poland and America also jumped.

Twenty-one paras were injured in the drop – none seriously – but a planned jump by 58 veterans, the oldest 84, was cancelled because of the weather.

One 76-year-old veteran did jump. Former sergeant Tex Banwell, from north London, parachuted, as he has done in previous years, from a private aircraft.

The event was just one of dozens organised throughout Gelderland, Holland to commemorate Market Garden – Montgomery's ill-fated operation to shorten the war.

The Battle of Arnhem was the British Army's last defeat destroyed in the fighting, and they were later driven away and their homes ransacked.

The 50th anniversary airborne pilgrimage began with a reception and opening ceremony at the Rhine Hall, Arnhem. Children from Britain, Poland and the Netherlands performed on stage, and soloist Caroline Kaart sang a medley of wartime songs before an audience of appreciative veterans and their families.

The first 17 commemorative medals being issued this year to Arnhem veterans and next of kin were presented on stage. The recipients included two war widows, Dutch resistance fighters and the chairman of the Arnhem Veterans' Association, Mr Dave Morris.

One of the biggest cheers was reserved for blind veteran Mr Ray Sherriff. He was blinded when a mortar shell fell among them on the first evening of the operation. He received his soldiers. "It was the most difficult decision I have had to take in my five years as mayor."

All over the former battle-grounds of Operation Market Garden, many pilgrimages and acts of remembrance were made by regimental associations and individual groups of soldiers.

medal from eight-year-old Michael de Jong.

Local residents and minority groups, remembering the executions of Dutch civilians and looting of homes, objected angrily to a suggestion that German veterans should be invited to this year's official ceremonies.

Arnhem mayor Paul Scholten, who initially suggested their inclusion, decided not to invite former German

One ceremony commemorated the valiant attempt by 315 men of 4th Battalion, The Dorset Regiment to reinforce 1st Airborne Division troops holding out in Oosterbeek by crossing the river under withering German fire on September 25, 1944.

The only formed British unit from 30 Corps to enter the battle from the ground, they suffered heavy losses. All but 75 were killed or captured.

This year, 12 veterans crossed the Rhine again. They were ferried across the river in four assault boats paddled by soldiers from the Territorial Army's 4th Battalion, The Devonshire and Dorset Regiment.

One of the most poignant annual ceremonies is the silent procession from Arnhem's restored Eusebius Church to Airborne Square set inside a sunken roundabout close to one end of the famous bridge. All traffic stops during the 600 yard act of homage.

This year, as the veterans marched in their hundreds, they were led by two Dutch people holding boards and asking for silence.

Only the tramp of feet and the jingling of medals could be heard as the old soldiers marched to the square.

In the centre of Airborne Square – which is actually round – stands a broken column of stone from the town's former Palace of Justice, destroyed in the fighting around the bridge.

Standards lowered, the veterans bowed their heads as prayers were said for the fallen. Many shed tears. Two primary school children unveiled a plaque of dolomite limestone bearing the inscription "Battle of Arnhem – Bridge to the Future".

At Oosterbeek, where the main force held out before withdrawing across the Rhine, the Arnhem Veterans' Association (AVA) presented an old-fashioned red GPO telephone box to the village.

The association's vice-president, Maj Gen Anthony Deane-Drummond, watched as the Mayor of Renkum cut the ribbon. Afterwards, AVA chairman Dave Morris and fellow veteran Ted Hotine squeezed into the box to make the first telephone call.

On the night of September 25-26, 1944, almost 2,400 British and Polish airborne troops were ferried to safety across the Rhine by British and Canadian Royal Engineers who made dozens of trips in their small boats under heavy German fire.

On a river bank at Driel, their gallantry is marked by a simple white granite slab bearing the badges of the two regiments. An inscription reads "They were just whispers and shadows in the night". A wreath is laid there annually.

Following their drop at Ginkel Heath, the paras picked up their bergens and marched towards Arnhem. Their destination, eight miles away, was the John Frost Bridge.

When they arrived, they gathered by the river to hear the commanding officer of 10 Para, Lt Col Robert Kershaw, describe the wartime action of 2 Para at the bridge.

He is suitably qualified to talk about the Battle of Arnhem, having had a book published on the subject, albeit from the German perspective.

The Colonel-Commandant of the Parachute Regiment, Maj Gen Rupert Smith, and the GOC 3rd (UK) Division, Maj Gen Mike Jackson, looked on appreciatively as Col Kershaw spoke.

Soldiers from United Kingdom and Germany-based Army Air Corps squadrons joined more than 100 of their wartime predecessors from the Glider Pilot Regiment in paying homage to fallen comrades at the Airborne Monument in Oosterbeek.

Glider Pilot Regiment Association chairman Mr Nick Nicholls told Soldier that AAC personnel had accompanied their regiment's pilgrimage for the past three years.

"Every year, after the main service of remembrance at Oosterbek War Cemetery, our members gather here to lay a wreath.

"Being the 50th anniversary, we have had our largest turnout, but many ex-glider pilots may never return. In the fullness of time when we are all dead, we see today's Army Air Corps carrying on the tradition," said Mr Nicholls.

Sometimes overlooked in accounts of the Battle of Arnhem are the Commonwealth aircrew from Britain, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa who braved heavy flak and attacks by German fighters to resupply troops on the ground.

Responsible for pushing out supplies of food and ammunition from Stirling and Dakota aircraft were Royal Army Service Corps air despatchers. They lost 79 soldiers during the operation.

At least one soldier was flung to his death when his aircraft took evasive action.

Two air despatchers received the Distinguished Flying Medal, a third the Military Medal.

This year, on the 50th anniversary of the first resupply flight, a new memorial was unveiled. It is dedicated to the memory of the RASC air despatchers who gave their lives, and is the very last memorial which the Dutch authorities have permitted to be erected in the Arnhem area.

The Hopton Wood stone monument was transported to Holland and erected by members of 47 Air Despatch Squadron, RLC, the only British Army air despatch unit in existence. A contingent of 47 Sqn soldiers paraded with veterans as Maj Gen Rupert Smith unveiled the Arnhem Air Despatch Memorial. The Band of the Royal Logistic Corps played hymns during the service.

Frustrated by the weather, old paras were determined to jump again, and they did so 24 hours later over a nearby airfield.

First to go was 80-year-old George Sheldrake, who jumped in tandem with AAC helicopter pilot Sgt Dick Kalinski. One of the last to jump, Bill Kimpton (73), broke a vertebra in his back as he landed and was taken to hospital.

The veterans had been trained by Maj Bob Card AAC, who said his decision to call off the jump at Ginkel Heath was one of the hardest he had ever had to make.

"It was terribly sad. They were all so disappointed," he said.

Throughout the region, other aspects of Market Garden were commemorated.

Rwanda force pays tribute

MEMBERS of The Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment joined British Paras serving with the United Nations in Rwanda in commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Battle of Arnhem.

The British contingent is mainly comprised of units directly descended from elements of the 1st Airborne Division that took part in Operation Market Garden.

Those taking part in a service of remembrance at a sport stadium in Kigali were 23 Parachute Field Ambulance RAMC, 9 Parachute Squadron RE, 10 Airborne Workshop REME, 216 Parachute Signal, 82 Airborne General Support and 63 Airborne Close Support Squadrons RLC.

The commander of the British soldiers in Rwanda, Lt Col Mike Wharmby, told them that the qualities of sacrifice, courage and unfaltering determination at Arnhem characterised Britain's Airborne Forces.

Padre Andrew Phillips took the service at which Spr Marc Dorkings of 9 Para Sqn RE read a representative list of names from a roll of honour of the 1,485 troops killed in the battle. LCpl Gary Mahaffy of 10 AB Wksp REME played the Last Post.

Acknowledging the cheers of the crowd, wartime tank commander, Lord Peter Carrington and the Grenadier Guards' Regimental Lieutenant Colonel, Maj Gen Bernard Gordon Lennox ride in a Sherman tank to commemorate the capture of the bridge at Nijmegen

The "Garden" part of the operation intended that troops on the ground thrust forward up what became known as Hell's Highway through Nijmegen to link with airborne troops in Arnhem.

At Nijmegen's Waal Bridge, a plaque commemorating the crossing of the Grenadier guards was unveiled by Lord Carrington, in 1944 a captain and 2iC of 1 Squadron, and who commanded the second tank to cross.

With Maj Gen Bernard Gordon Lennox, Regimental

Lieutenant Colonel of the Grenadier Guards, he mounted a Sherman tank and was driven across the bridge, waving to thousands of enthusiastic spectators. He was followed by a 700-strong convoy of old military vehicles which had driven from Belgium to the town.

The pilgrimage culminated in an airborne memorial service at the Oosterbeek War Cemetery attended by Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands and the Prince of Wales.

More than 1,700 soldiers are buried there, including most of the casualties of the 1st Airborne Division. Prince Charles told more than 2,000 veterans and widows of the battle that their heroism and self-sacrifice would never be forgotten.

In an emotive address, the Rev E L Phillips, wartime padre of 3 Para, spoke of the enduring friendship between the 1st Airborne Division and the Dutch people they had been unable to liberate.

Local schoolchildren laid flowers beside each white headstone. This year, they were joined by pupils from Putney High School, London and Polish children and scouts.

The rain that had dogged the veterans during their four-day pilgrimage held off for most of the service, but began again during the sounding of the Last Post and the one-minute silence that followed.

Raindrops mingled with tears as veterans and war widows wept quietly while remembering comrades and husbands who died in September 1944.

The cemetery's roll of honour swells with each passing year. Set to one side of the cemetery, close to the Polish plot stand two headstones.

They mark the graves of Ptes Douglas Lowery and Ernest Ager of The Border Regiment, whose remains were uncovered last year when the slit trench in which they died was excavated.

Former comrades carried the coffins when they were reinterred late last year. Recently the remains of an as yet unidentified Royal Engineer were discovered. He, too, will be buried at Oosterbeek.

As they do every year, veterans walking from the cemetery paused frequently to sign autographs for children. To two generations of children in Oosterbeek, the old soldiers are heroes. Despite the passage of half a century, this admiration will remain in their hearts for years to come.

Please be there when they need you

The Army Benevolent Fund provides help to any man or woman and their families if they are serving or have served in the British Army and are in real need. This help is given in two ways: through grants to supplement Corps or Regimental aid and by financial support to over 70 national charities providing for the special needs of those in distress.

Our overall aim is to bring help to the many cases where state assistance is inapplicable, inadequate or unable to meet the immediate need.

Awarded on merit

CAPT (Retd) Richard A Stewart (September 5) suggested that the LS and GC and the MSM should be amalgamated as a single long service award.

The MSM is much more than a simple extension of the LS and GC. First, it is awarded only to SNCOs and warrant officers and for a minimum of 27 years' unblemished service.

Secondly, a recommendation from your CO is not sufficient to obtain the award. This is a citation award and must be recommended by the recipient's district commander.

The MSM is a special award for meritorious service and should remain separate for these reasons. — WO2 M I Kippin, Intelligence Corps, MSM LS and GC (and bar), Cheltenham.

1 RGBW's US citation

I WRITE to say how pleased I was to see the article (July 11) about Colours for the 1st Battalion, The Royal Gloucestershire, Berkshire and Wiltshire Regiment.

You recorded the addition of the Solmar-Ri streamer, representing the Presidential citation, tied on by the Chief of Staff of the US Army — though I pass over the (dare I say?) insolent gesture of the 49th and their red hackles, a regrettable incident in an altogether regrettable war.

I thought your readers might like to know that the gold-edged blue rectangle directly below the regimental badge on the Drum Major's sash on the front cover represents that Solmar-Ri streamer, the US Army's way of indicating a battle honour. — Mrs Douglas Ryan, New York.

HERALDIC HIATUS

I HAD always previously considered the duller cap badge to have been worn by the Royal Army Chaplains Department prior to 1940.

That one was almost exactly the same shape as the 1 RGBW badge, the main difference being that a small version of the King's crown was imposed on the top edge to give slight relief to the monotony.

May I suggest that the real difficulty with the RGBW badge is not the quality of manufacture but the tedious shape of the badge, a sort of heraldic hiatus and something beyond the manufacturer's control. — P R McDonald, Aldbrough, E Yorkshire.

What will happen to Pte Stevie?

AS A German Shepherd dog owner and enthusiast, I was delighted to learn that Private Stevie Alsatian had found a good home with the RLC Pioneer Detachment at Split (Soldier, August 22).

I hate to be a wet blanket but the British squaddie's record in caring for his locally acquired pets is not, with few exceptions (Rats in N Ireland) particularly good when things get difficult.

It worries me, therefore, what will happen to Stevie when the British leave in a hurry or when the costs of transport to UK and quarantine bills have to be faced. — Colin J Cummings, Yelvertoft, Northamptonshire.

Time lapse and medals

JUST a small point about the Suez Emergency Medal.

It appears that the main argument now used to sustain the negation is the "unequivocal" ruling by the Honours and Decorations Committee "not to consider proposals for awards recognising service many years after the events in which that service was given". (Extract from the Prime Minister's letter to Col Newton dated July 12, 1994).

How is this statement reconciled with the H and D Committee's recent institution of the Accumulated Campaign Service Medal which is necessarily given for service "many years after the events"? — Suezvet (name and address supplied).

I STRONGLY agree with J Singh (July 25) who asked why there is no BAOR commemorative medal.

As a former member of the British Army and a current member of the Canadian Forces I believe that if it is good enough for Canada to recognise those soldiers who have served in Germany with a Special Service Medal (SSM), why can't Britain?

In recent weeks I have been reading about PC Ken Fowler and his creation of a Voluntary Service Medal (VSM). I know this is not officially sanctioned but would it not make sense to recognise it and add a BAOR clasp for those who served in Germany? — S W Billich, Toronto.

● Similar sentiments about the Canadian SSM have been expressed by James W Jacobs, of Fareham, Hants. — Editor

PoW diaries help others

DIARIES written secretly on scraps of paper by an RAMC captain during three and a half years as a Japanese PoW in Singapore have raised more than £2,000 for charity.

After the fall of Singapore in February 1942 Capt Gordon Marshall, who was attached to No 1 Malayan General Hospital in Selarang, was reported "missing" and it was not until the end of that year that his family received confirmation that he was a prisoner-of-war - first at Changi and latterly at

Old stone signals new intent

Maj Gen Archie Birtwistle (left), Master of Signals, and Mr Peter Monson, Master of the Worshipful Company of Information Technologists, unveil the foundation stone for a new wing of the Museum of Army Communications at Blandford. The ceremony took place during a regimental dinner night at Blandford Camp and marked another step forward in the campaign to extend the museum. Construction is due to start on October 19 and be completed by July 8 next year, in time for the 75th anniversary of the founding of the Royal Corps of Signals.

The foundation stone was originally taken to the camp in 1966 as part of the camp entrance roundabout which was dismantled earlier this year. A statue by Faith Winter, presently at Catterick, is to be erected on the site.

Kranji. Released in 1945, Capt Marshall became a GP in Kent until a year before his death in 1974.

Fourteen years later his widow Sheila published The Changi Diaries as a tribute to her husband and the first two editions raised £2,000 for charities, including the Burma Star Association.

The third edition, a 234-page paperback which tells the story of those years of captivity in vivid detail, is available at £10 a copy from the Gordon Marshall Memorial Fund, The Clock House, Broadstairs, Kent CT10 3AY, with proceeds going to the Margate Theatre Royal Trust.

Royal uniforms in exhibition

A UNIFORM worn by the Queen when she served in the Auxiliary Territorial Service (ATS) during the Second World War is one of the exhibits in a free exhibition which has opened at the National Army Museum, Chelsea. Telling the story of women in Britain's land forces from the 17th century to the present, The Right to Serve includes many items donated to the museum from the WRAC Collection last year. The WRAC uniform of the Duchess of Kent is also on show.

Quality posting

IT IS estimated that up to ten million silk postcards were issued between 1900 and 1945 - many of them depicting military badges.

A large number from the First World War are listed in The Concise Catalogue of Embroidered Silk Postcards, by John Westland.

The paperback, published to coincide with this year's centenary of the first British picture postcards, contains 32 colour photographs and is available at £8.95, plus £1 postage and packing from J S Westland, 35 Henrys Avenue, Woodford Green, Essex IG8 9RB.

THE HOUSEHOLD CAVALRY MOUNTED REGIMENT CALENDAR FOR 1995

The Warrant Officers' and Non-Commissioned Officers' Mess of the Household Cavalry Mounted Regiment have commissioned Miss Christine Bousfield to paint thirteen original pictures depicting various aspects of regimental life.

These pictures have been compiled into a calendar for the year commencing January 1995. The calendar is so designed that after each month the relevant print of the original picture can be removed, mounted and framed, if required.

This Calendar not only makes a practical gift to members of the Regiment and friends, but will also make that attractive "extra" to military collectors and horse enthusiasts all over the world.

Gamble that almost succeeded

"THROUGHOUT the 50 years which have elapsed since those fateful days of September 1944, the controversy over Operation Market Garden has endured with much discussion, and indeed disagreement, over reasons for its failure.

"1st Airborne Division's epic battle at Arnhem and Oosterbeek has often been referred to as a glorious defeat.

"It has also been described, in the words of a much respected former senior officer of Airborne Forces, as 'the biggest cock-up of all time' . . ."

So writes Peter Harclerode in Arnhem: A Tragedy of Errors, published to mark the half-centenary of a very costly gamble.

The book is an extremely well-researched account of what went wrong with Montgomery's throw of the dice which was aimed to prove that he was the greatest strategist of the Second World War.

It may well have been a justifiable risk had it not been for the discord and disagreement between Allied commanders that festered since the Normandy landings.

On the American side, Gens Bradley and Patton had a dislike for Montgomery, regarding him as a commander of no great ability.

No doubt Montgomery wanted, more than anything, to prove that his strategy to drive up through Holland and then on to the Ruhr was the war-winning plan. But generals are only human, sometimes willing to take gambles if the odds seem attractive enough, even deliberately disregarding German signals, intercepted and interpreted through Ultra by Station X at Bletchley Park.

Montgomery was dismissive of this intelligence when it concerned the deployment of German forces around Arnhem as well as those threatening the relieving forces of XXX Corps.

"Lt Gen Brian Horrocks was one of those who questioned

Army cameramen Sgts Lewis and Walker share a meal with a Dutch girl after landing with the first troops at Arnhem

Picture: Imperial War Museum

But the dice were loaded at Arnhem

later why XXX Corps in particular had received no intelligence about the enemy forces at his front.

"He believed that it was probably due to a determination at high level to commit First Airborne Army to battle in an operation designed to finish the war before the end of 1944."

The author spares little in his emphasis on the inadequate planning of Operation Market Garden and how Maj Gen Roy Urquhart was forced to accept fewer aircraft for his 1st Airborne Division.

He, it is said, would have been able to land more, if not all, his infantry and anti-tank elements on the first day if Lt Gen "Boy" Browning had not insisted on flying in his 1st Airborne Corps Main HQ which was far from imperative for the operation.

The choice of landing and dropping zones at Arnhem comes in for criticism as it has many times in the past.

In and around Arnhem itself, one of the main problems encountered by 1st Airborne Division was that of communication and particularly the unsuitability of radio equipment issued to airborne forces. It is certainly apparent that the equipment failed to work satisfactorily under operational conditions.

Another factor contributing to the failure at Arnhem was the lack of close air support from the RAF.

Planning and preparation aside, it is the recriminations directed at Lt Gen Sir Miles Dempsey's Second British Army, charged with driving its support to Arnhem, that takes up most of Harclerode's explanation for the débâcle.

Dempsey has come in for criticism for lack of supervision of the three corps in his Army, leaving too much to the devices of their commanders, Horrocks, O'Connor and Ritchie.

The author contends that had Dempsey exercised closer supervision, it is possible that VIII and XII Corps would have made better progress and caught up sooner with XXX Corps.

"It is worthy of note that throughout Market Garden, VIII and XII Corps between them suffered a total of 3,874 casualties, and XXX Corps 1,480."

Nevertheless, as is well known, the Second Army and, in particular, XXX Corps, failed to reach Arnhem in time and Maj Gen Roy Urquhart voiced criticism of Lt Gen Horrocks and his divisional commanders, adding an implication that XXX Corps had an easy time in Belgium prior to Market Garden, an accusation that Harclerode believes to be unfair and incorrect.

Market Garden, we are told, failed at a heavy cost: "The destruction of Arnhem and Oosterbeek, the virtual annihilation of 1st Airborne Division and a total of more than 16,000 casualties..."

However, on the credit side, the operation drove a wedge between the German 1st Parachute and Fifteenth Armies, preventing a counter-attack on Antwerp, and provided a base for subsequent operations on the Rhine. The war was not to end before the close of 1944 as Montgomery and many others had hoped.

But it must be remembered that those who took part in Operation Market Garden very nearly achieved their objectives. — BJ

Pride of the 51st recalled

FORMED in 1908, disbanded in 1967, the 51st Highland Division's life was short compared with some regiments.

But in its 59 years it recorded numerous, and for the thousands of men who served in this famous unit, memorable victories.

With D-Day 50 just passed and the anniversary of VE Day approaching, a reprint soft-cover version of the 1952 History of the Highland Division 1939-45, has been issued.

In the 1914-18 war thousands of its men were killed, 8,500 on the Somme alone; Festubert, Ancre, Rouex, Flanders, Havincourt, Flequiers and Fontaine-Notre Dame accounted for another 12,000 or more.

Between 1939 and 1945 the 51st carried on the traditions laid down by their old comrades, winning praise from all quarters, including the enemy.

One striking aspect in this account is that pride in the Division apparently took precedence over that of the regiment, even though the Division included such regiments as The Black Watch, The Seaforth Highlanders, The Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders, The Gordon Highlanders and The Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders.

This story of heroism, sacrifice and the ferocity in battle the Highlanders is a timely reminder of the part played by this famous unit in both world wars. — JM

PRINCE RUPERT RE-EXAMINED

PRINCE Rupert was an amazing man. He excelled at art and mathematics, he could speak six, possibly seven languages by the time he was 13, he was a superb horseman, swordsman and shot, with a life-long passion for hunting.

He was a natural athlete with an iron constitution and stood 6ft 4in in his socks.

Born in the Palatinate, a historic division of West Germany, it is uncertain whether he possessed charm as well as these other qualities: Gen Sir Frank Kitson points out in Prince Rupert - Portrait of a Soldier that, as a youngster, he had an uncontrollable temper.

Childish tantrums or not, he was to become at an early age an extremely brave and dashing cavalry commander supporting his uncle King Charles I against Cromwell.

But even though defeated at Marston Moor and Naseby and the Royalist cause lost, he was still only in his mid-twenties and switched to the sea to command a Royalist privateering fleet. He lost that one as well, being hounded from the seas by Admiral Robert Blake.

Still not finished, he returned to England in 1660 - 11 years after Charles was executed - to distinguish himself as an admiral and director of England's naval affairs in the Dutch Wars.

Rupert's life has fascinated Gen Kitson since his own early military days and is another step on the way to restoring something of the German's reputation as an outstanding military leader.

A number of earlier books view him as a playboy leader of the Cavaliers. Gen Kitson disagrees, seeing him as "one of the sharpest intellects of the age to bear upon military problems". — JM

Sticking to their guns

A BEWILDERING array of handguns of every description, from the Snaphance pistol of the 16th century to caseless cartridge rifles and plastic-bodied sub-machine guns of today and the future, is listed and lavishly illustrated in Military Small Arms.

With more than 500 full-colour pictures of every conceivable hand weapon, the editor, Graham Smith, a former Soldier staff writer, has put together a remarkable catalogue and reference detailing the history of revolvers, automatic pistols, rifles of all types and machine-guns.

But it is the photographs which will captivate most readers. They are attractively set out, numbered and well captioned.

The End of an Era
Band of the 9th/12th Royal Lancers
Conductor: Bandmaster G J Bright

ANOTHER farewell from the long list of disappearing regimental bands. A cavalry band this time, and a right royal farewell it is, with most of the horsey music enough to make old troopers weep.

Having recently dined with an ex-Colonel of the Regiment my ears are still ringing with what I can only call stable language.

An absolute must in such a programme was the old mucking-out song Tarpaulin Jacket, always sung by troopers as Old Stable Jacket. It is all about a lancer's wishes when he dies - six stalwart lancers shall carry me - and of course, wrap me up in my old stable jacket.

The tune is now part of the Queen's Royal Lancers march, and is nicely sung here by Cpl John Park without sentimentality, yet more emotive than any other soldiers' song.

After the Regimental Call we have my march Cavalry Walk for trumpets and band, and Suppe's overture Light Cavalry in which I preferred Mr Bright's version to an Austrian conductor's at the Proms recently. The latter's tempi were neither walk, trot nor gallop in the main tune.

The Post Horn Galop marks the end of this particular cavalry era, light music brightening the mood after the nostalgia.

Two solos are Lassus Trom- bone and Robbin' Harry on xylophone, with Cpl Park again in a Salute to Sinatra. Yet again I prefer the Lancers version to old Frankie.

The Big Band does a Glen Miller with In the Mood, and the pop group is very professional in Rawhide, Minnie the Moocher, and That Lovin' Feeling, all with John Park well to the fore singing in various styles.

The finale is the John Miles

Welch wake

We'll Keep a Welcome
Band of the Royal Welch Fusiliers
Conductor: Bandmaster P Goodwin

AFTER the cavalry wake we have a Welsh one, or should it be a Welch one?

The band is now part of one of the Prince of Wales's Division bands and here it gives a final programme of marches, mostly with a regimental association.

They are interspersed with a light overture by Trevor Sharpe named after a house he once lived in called Southfield, the catchy Serenade by Derek Bourgeois, A Nightingale Sang, and a medley, That's Entertainment.

Standard marches are Namur, Bond of Friendship, and Blankenburg's quite rare My Congratulations.

After which Wales comes to the fore with Mr Goodwin's fanfare Castell Conwy, Sousa's march dedicated to and named after the regiment, a march originally for tune Music, Cavalry Last Post and Hymn Tune, and a last request from this band for God to bless the Prince of Wales.

A very fine programme skilfully played, sung, and conducted. Even infants will find it most enjoyable.

• From Music Masters, MM CD 435 £12, cassette £7, End House, Gurnell's Road, Seer Green, Bucks.

two harps also called Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Derek Kimberley's setting of God Bless the PoW, a concert march by Gordon Langford The Prince of Wales, and another based on a regimental song The Flash and Hackle. The theme continues with T J Powell's well known Castell Coch, a piece called The Princess of Wales, and the obligatory Men of Harlech in an arrangement by Robert Farnon.

By way of finale are the St David's Day Toasts, which I gather involve a little raw-leek eating, regimental mascot, fife and drummer, followed by the Loyal Toast and National Anthem.

An amazing fact is that it is 70 years since the battalion served at home in Pembroke, so We'll Keep a Welcome has a special significance this year.

• From Bandleader, BNA 5107 CD £12, cassette £7.60, Sound and Picture Co, PO Box 177, Dorking, Surrey RH5 5FE.

RAF notch first win at long range

THE REGULAR Army finished as runners-up to the Royal Air Force – winners for the first time – in the Inter-Services long range small bore rifle championships for the Gilbert Trophy at Ash Ranges.

The airmen won both the long range and 50m matches and were third in the PSK (prone, standing, kneeling) match. The Army, whose final score was 16 to the RAF's 18, won the PSK match, were second in the long range and third in the 50m.

Third overall were the Territorial Army on 14 points, followed by the Royal Navy on nine and the RAFRF on six.

Despite an improvement by Combined Services, they once again lost to the English Small Bore Union in their annual fixture, ESBV winning by 136 points. In the other annual match, the Police Athletic Association achieved a rare victory over the Regular Army, winning both long range and 50m competitions.

Cpl Sue McGregor (RAF)

Tennis champion Maj Barry Hill

Hill sets highest standard

THE NAME may have changed and the numbers diminished, but the standard of competition at the UKSC(G) lawn tennis championships remained as high as ever.

Sponsored by Coca-Cola Germany, the tournament was staged at Rheindahlen and dominated by Maj Barry Hill, who won the men's singles, the men's doubles (with Mr A Butterworth), the mixed doubles (Mrs Dalglish) and the veteran's singles.

Rain held off until the prize-giving when the heavens opened as outgoing chairman of lawn tennis Col Robin Field-Smith and Ferr Charles Honigwachs from the sponsors presented the trophies.

Results:

Men's singles – Maj B Hill bt LCpl Fletcher; women's singles – Mrs L Dalglish bt Mrs B Hamilton; men's doubles – Maj B Hill/Mr A Butterworth bt SSgt Talbot/LCpl Fletcher; women's doubles – Mrs Dalglish/Mrs Hamilton bt Sig Molloy/Sig Smallman; mixed doubles – Maj B Hill/Mrs Dalglish bt Mr and Mrs Cousins.

Arms and corps doubles – SSgt Talbot/LCpl Ingham (R Sigs) bt Cpl Thomas/Cpl Kelly (REME); veterans' singles – Maj B Hill bt SSgt Talbot; U-25 singles – LCpl Fletcher bt LCpl Ungham; men's plate – SSgt Davidson; women's plate – Sig Molloy.

Now BAD athletes are good

BAD Kineton's winning margin in the Minor Units athletic championships at Aldershot in July – the largest in the history of the competition – was the high point of a rewarding season for the RLC base's athletes.

The Leamington Spa-based team won five other championships during the season, including the Wales and Western District, the RLC Minor Units, the Army (UK) southern semi-finals, the Army single events, and the minor units marathon.

Kineton's athletes were impeccably turned out thanks to a sponsorship deal negotiated by Capt Clive Osborne and ex-WO2 (QMSI) Steve Grimwade with former England international Rosemary Duddle, who runs a specialist athletics shop in Loughborough.

RELAYS VENUE CHANGE

THE ARMY's competitive cross country season gets under way on November 12 when the relays will be run at Tweseldown, not Rushmoor as previously scheduled.

The Army's domestic championships will be at Longmoor on February 1, RAF Halton hosts the Inter-Services on February 17 and the Combined Services match on March 4, and the Infantry will be organising the Inter-Corps cross country championships at Warminster on March 8.

There is a doubt over the timing and venue of the Regular Army-Territorial Army match scheduled for March 25, but the Army half and full marathons will be run concurrently with the Fleet and Gosport events.

won the Inter-Services individual championship for the Wilkinson Sword.

Maj Peter Underhill (D and D) won the Army small bore title, also shot at Ash Ranges, after a decisive standing/kneeling phase. His winning tally of 2,865 took him a point clear of Lt Col Alan Glasby (RLC), with Capt Cameron Ferguson (REME) third on 2,819.

Entries for the competition were again disappointingly low, with only ten shooting, two fewer than last year.

Arborfield youths impress against county

PRINCESS Marina College, Arborfield took on Hampshire Youth at Jubilee Park, Waterlooville in preparation for the forthcoming Apprentice and County Youth Cup competitions, writes Derrick Bly.

Coach Chris Eade, fresh from a SEE District sixes success in the afternoon, had reason to be proud of his side despite a 3-1 defeat.

Both sides entertained the small crowd to a skilful, attacking game played at a cracking pace. Hampshire took the lead in the 14th minute and PMC should have equalised immediately when Martin's superb pass was headed wide by White.

But the Arborfield side did draw level five minutes into the second half thanks to a tremendous drive by Banks. Hampshire regained the lead when the unfortunate Lee Elliott, under pressure, hooked an awkward ball past his brother Jan in the PMC goal.

At the other end, PMC won a penalty when White was brought down, but Barnard's shot was well saved.

Chris Eade gave substitute 'keeper Ritchie, Butcher and Irvine a taste of the action but the county sealed victory with a third goal.

Prison side puts lock on young Army team

Wearing the No 9 shirt is former Army and Combined Service boxing champion LCpl Lee Innes (1 RSME Regt, Chatham).

An inexperienced Army side led by coach QMSI Joey Roach lost 1-4 to the prison officers.

SSgt Mick Johnson scored the home side's consolation goal.

Where there's Hope . . .

Carshalton Ath 3, Army 3

AN experimental Army side took on a mixed Carshalton Athletic team at the Diadora League ground and fought back to snatch a creditable 3-3 draw, writes Derrick Bly.

Cpl Wayne McHugh was fractionally offside when put through by Pte Mark Shaw and Bdr Steve McCusker, and Pte Lee Bradbury fired over from a Pte John Wills corner.

The home side scored in the 18th minute and might have gone two up but for a brilliant save by Army 'keeper Sgt Nigel Wiscombe. Pte David Hope put the Army back on level terms just before the break when he was put through by SSgt Mick Johnson.

McHugh went to hospital after an accidental clash of heads left him with a nasty gash needing five stitches.

Carshalton scored twice more, striker Vines – who bore a passing resemblance to Football League goalscorer Cyril Regis in both looks and ability – completing a hat trick before the Army came back strongly, scoring twice in the last three minutes to level the scores.

LCpl Steve Bowie scored his first goal in Army colours when the ball reached him from a throw-in on the right, and immediately followed it up with his second. From the restart Johnstone found David Hope who neatly beat two defenders before gently pushing the ball through to Bowie who tucked it away with a minimum of fuss.

Bowie's late strike earns Army a draw

Dover Athletic 7, Army 0

A below-strength Army side was crushed 7-0 by Vauxhall Conference outfit Dover Athletic at the Crabble Stadium.

Stand-in 'keeper Cpl Andy McWilliams had an anxious time as shots rained in from a strong Dover side missing only David Leworthy from their full line-up.

● Sixteen units from all over the UK took part in the Army FA women's six-a-side finals at ATR Basingstoke, with 15 Regt RLC proving worthy winners.

Women's Services Northern Ireland were the pre-tournament favourites, although in the event 15 Regt, PCD Mill Hill, 8 Arty Sp Regt, and Colchester Garrison gave them little opportunity to relax.

The match between WSNI, holders of the title, and 15 Regt proved crucial, SSgt Dawn Parker deciding the tie for the loggies with a thunderous shot which was the only goal of the game.

WSNI finished as runners-up, Colchester were third, 8 Arty fourth and PCD fifth.

Capt Colin Dickson, first in an international field in Canada

Infantry orienteer sets the pace

CAPT Colin Dickson of the Small Arms School Corps achieved a fine result against international competition in winning his class at the Canadian and Northern American orienteering championships.

Dickson was one of a six strong Infantry team which competed in the Great Lakes orienteering festival at Ontario in Canada.

The festival included both Canadian and North American championships and attracted athletes of high calibre. Courses were physically tough and demanded a high standard of technical ability.

Other members of the Infantry team also produced good results, WO2 Richard Bonnett (R Anglian), finishing a close fifth behind Dickson on the M35 course. On the M21 course, Maj Chris Kemp (Para) was seventh, Maj Mike Nott (Para) 20th, Capt Dennis Vincent (R Anglian) 26th and Cpl Geoff Jeffrey (RGJ) 27th.

The team were shown great hospitality by Canadian Forces based at Border where they visited 3 Royal Canadian Regiment, one of the new "90:10" (ten per cent Regular, 90 per cent part time) battalions. British liaison officer at the base is Maj Steve Colling (REME).

Kingsman takes over in hot seat

SGT NORMAN Phillips (PWRR), who coached the Army boxing squad to its 11th consecutive Inter-Services team title last winter, is to hand over the reins after just one year in the hot seat, writes John Elliott.

Phillips, due to leave the Service after Christmas, is currently handing over a promising young novice squad to RSM Tom O'Connor, coach to the highly successful 1st Battalion, The King's Regiment team.

O'Connor will be the man in charge when the serious business of the Inter-Services defence begins in the New Year.

His baptism of fire will be in the cauldron of HMS Nelson, home of Royal Navy boxing, on February 2. Two weeks later, on February 16, the Army is due to meet the Royal Air Force on home ground at Aldershot.

First shots in the Inter-Services' tournament will be fired on January 19 by the RAF and the Navy at RAF Cosford.

The CSBA individual championships, on March 1-2, are also to be hosted by Cosford, as will be the ABA quarter-finals involving Combined Services on March 18.

In a radical departure from tradition, the ABA has matched Combined Services with London in the quarter-finals. For as long as anyone can remember, the Servicemen have boxed off against Western Counties for a place in the all-England semi-finals.

Under the new regime, the county opposition will change every two years.

WO2 O'Connor gets his first taste of Army-level competition with matches against British Police in London and a joint Army-Police bill against North Western Counties at Stockport.

His 1 Kings boxers won the Army Grade 3 championship in 1992-93 and were runners up last winter. In the past two seasons he has coached no fewer than 13 individual novice champions.

Of last year's squad, heavyweight champion Cpl Steve Burford (REME) has hung up his gloves, Pte Paul Treslove (Para) will be on duty in Northern Ireland, and Pte Sven Hamer (Para) has left the Army.

Cpl Joe Rajcoomar has also left. The live-wire Mauritian, so long an integral part of the team as both boxer and coach, has started a business studies degree course at Durham University.

Tragically, Fus Dale Duncan (RRF) sustained serious spinal injuries in a road traffic accident in the North East. All involved in the sport will be hoping the little bantamweight makes a complete recovery.

Two newcomers to Army boxing include flyweight John Davidson of The Royal Scots, who wore Scotland's colours in the recent world Under-19 championships, and Gnr Hunter of 3 RHA, a former Young England squad member.

Pte Sam Boreham (PWRR) returns to training after a tour of duty in Northern Ireland. He was an NABC runner-up at lightweight in 1992-93.
